'Give and Take' Policy Held Essential in World Affairs; Taft Points Way to Stability

"All the sacrifices of the last five years would have been void" if the Yalta conference hadn't accepted the plan of giving Russia the Polish territory east of the Curzon line, Charles P. Taft, director of economic affairs for the U.S. department of state, declared here Tuesday.

The Ohio attorney, son of the late President William Howard Taft and brother of US Senator Robert Taft, told several hundred persons at the Marion hotel that in the field of international relations "you must take the best you can get that does not interfere with going further," and added that if the Russian solution to the Polish question had not been accepted there would have been a "break" in the allies.

He paid high tribute to the work of the US state department; said that its program "is by no means partisan." (Taft is a high ranking republican) and commented that "once Germany and Japan have been defeated there is going to be no problem of peace for a number of years -- our immediate problems after hostilities are going to be economic problems."

Council Important

Listed as high in importance in solving such problems was the economic and social council of 18 members, evolved in the Dumbarton Oaks plan, designed to coordinate activities of various organizations in various nations.

Taft termed the "key" problem those of high employment levels, statistics for planning, and population movements, and declared that "what happens in this country" regarding business and employment, "will have a tremendous effect on other countries."

High in importance, too, the speaker said, was "the restoration of normal interchange of goods between nations."

Carets Deemed Problem

In the field of international trade were listed such problems as carets (international trusts by private agreement), trade barriers (tariffs), and commodity arrangements (the opposite of private carets).

Regarding the Bretton Woods international financial arrangements and the forthcoming renewal-date for trade agreements (June 12), Taft said "the defeat of either or both of these (plans) will seriously prejudice this country in the economic field with the nations with which we deal."

After his talk, in the same room in which his famous father spoke 25 years ago, Taft told The Statesman the United States had a "fine" delegation ready for the San Francisco discussions of the United Nations next month, and that progress was assured in the field of international peace and economic relations under a policy of "a step at a time in the right direction."

State Officials Present

The address was at the regular noon luncheon of the Kiwanis club, with the chamber of commerce and other civic organizations cooperating. Those in attendance included Gov. Earl Snell, Secretary of State Robert Farrell, Jr., State Treasurer Leslie Scott, five members of the state supreme court (presented by Judge James T. Brand), and Charles A. Hart, Oregon chairman of the United Nations association before which Taft spoke last night.

The speaker, who was introduced by Frank Bennett, member of an honorary membership in the Salem chamber of commerce by Carl Hogg, immediate past president and director. Solos were given by Mrs. Robert Craig, accompanied by Mrs. Babette Millsbaugh.
