Mustard Plaster Healer for Woods

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The Forest service of the United States department of agriculture uses black mustard seed—the kind that is ground to dress frankfurters—to heal the scars of forest fires in the mountains of California.

Sown from a plane, the extremely light seed takes root quickly under adverse soil conditions and secures the topsoil in burned-over areas. Otherwise, with the first heavy rain, the topsoil would wash away to the lowlands.

WEALTH OF THE WEST

Education Among the resources of the West, none is held in higher esteem by its people than their educational institutions. There has been inherent in Westerners a deep regard for both the practical and cultural values of higher learning. From the institutions of the West, graduates in engineering, agriculture, mining, fishing, forestry, chemistry, and other sciences, have made important and far-reaching contributions to the utilization of the natural resources of this area to the enrichment of all mankind. At the same time, regard for the immediately practical has been coupled with the realization that man does not live by bread alone and our liberal arts colleges have produced scholars, writers, artists, and musicians of world-wide distinction. In counting its assets, this West puts highest value upon its young men and young women.
