three lawyers charged with defending Petain became so wound up in bitter charges and countercharges of diplomatic moves that one juror plaintively demanded that the trial should return to the question of Petain.

Reynaud's disclosure of the proposed "blood money" deal with Italy was brought out as Petain's lawyers attacked his testimony.

The point was brought out by Defense Attorney Jacques Isorny without warning in a voice dripping with sarcasm.

Almost in a casual conversational voice, he said:

"And now E Reynaud would you like to tell the high court under what conditions on May 24. 1940 you offered Mussolini, without England's knowledge, co-do-

Reynaud told about a letter he had written Mussolini suggesting they confer over "issues dividing our countries."

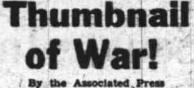

When Reynaud finished, Isorny read a deposition written by Charles Roux, a French diplomat, who asserted that a cable addressed to Rome envisaged offering Italy condominium over Tunisia and ceding French equatorial Africa.

No other Russians have visited Mondorf recently. And no one here is able to explain the Moscow radio report a few days ago that Ribbentrop, Goering, Striecher, Kesserling and other former nazi bigwigs were living a life of luxury behind barred doors.

The Moscow radio deplored what it called "the Mondorf luxury," saying the finest wines and foods and late model automobiles were available to the prisoners and only newpapers were denied them "so as not to spoil their appetites."

Juvenile Officer Nona White on Tuesday is not available for adoption, nor was he "abandoned," Mrs. White emphasized Tuesday night. The lad's young mother apparently did not understand the regulations at the boarding home where she left him last week, and where children are not as a rule kept over weekends, Mrs. White said. Reports that an 'abandoned" red-haired baby boy had come under authority of the juvenile court brought a number of queries from persons interested in adopting a child.
