Salem Sergeant Credited With Repulse, Luzon

WITH THE 33RD DIVISION ON LUZON — Sgt. Lawrence W. Lauinger, husband of Mrs. Nellie Lauinger, 60 East Turner road, Salem, Ore., has been credited by his officers with playing a major part in the repulse of a serious Jap attack on his unit.

Sergeant Lauinger, now an assistant squad leader in company D, 136th "Bearcat" infantry regiment, 33rd division, was a private first class in the machine gun platoon at the time. His company, dug-in on the reverse slope of a hill in the mountainous northern Luzon, was subjected to increasingly intense Jap mortar and artillery fire.

At the height of the barrage, Lauinger left the comparative safety of his foxhole to accompany his platoon leader to the high ground above the positions, crossing open terrain under the heavy fire to do so. There they observed the Jap emplacements and spotted attacking infantry. Sgt. Lauinger aided in directing artillery fire on the advancing Japs.

He helped organize the men with a plan of attack and led them to the top of the hill. Then, heedless of a rain of machine gun and rifle fire, Sgt. Lauinger went over the crest of the hill in front of his men. Under the inspiring leadership the Japs were driven from the hill.

Lauinger was a truck driver for the Pein Box and Crate Co. in Portland, Ore., before his induction. He joined the 136th in October 1942 at Fort Lewis, Wash., and trained with his outfit in the Mojave desert before sailing for overseas service. He has spent over two years in the Hawaiian islands, on New Guinea, on Morotai island before coming to Luzon.

He wears the combat infantryman's badge, the good conduct medal, the Asiatic-Pacific ribbon with two battle stars, and the Philippine liberation ribbon with one battle star.
