

All Manpower Controls Now Are Revoked

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12 - (AP) The government today revoked all war-time manpower controls, effective immediately, and set forth a plan aimed at speedy reemployment of veterans and released war workers.

In an action timed to coincide with Japan's surrender, the war manpower commission announced a program which it said would stimulate "reconversion activities and the speedy reemployment of displaced workers, at the same time restoring a free labor market."

Girl to Barrs—Mr. and Mrs. Karl J. Barr, 274 North 20th st., became the parents of a baby girl, at 12:30 p. m. at the Salem General hospital Tuesday.

Foretaste of Aerial Bombs Given Japs By Doolittle's Raiders Over 3 Years Ago

By the Associated Press
It was on a sunny noon in April, 1942, that the Japanese homeland first saw the receiving end of total war.

On that day—April 18—U.S. medium bombers roared over Tokyo and other major cities to drop what were to be the first of a steadily growing stream of deadly eggs.

Only 16 planes were in the raid, but they provided a powerful tonic for the American war effort. And for the Japanese they portended the day when hundreds of such bombers would appear regularly over their cities, unloading industry-busting bombs by the ton.

It was a year before all the details were released. Doolittle's Idea.

The idea of the attack had brewed for months after Pearl Harbor in the broad, bald head of Brig. Gen. James H. Doolittle. After highly secret training, he had put his specially-selected air crews aboard the aircraft carrier Hornet, attached to a task force commanded by Adm. William F. Halsey, Jr.
