Gardening Today

That you don't always get what you plan on when planting garden seeds was duly demonstrated by the China pinks...

On my desk I have five requests for names of "eastern daffodil growers who can get me something different than those grown here on the west coast. What I like best in gardening is growing something which my neighbors do not have."

Of course, all of these letters or notes are not worded exactly like the above. But the one is, and the others have the same train of thought.

My answer is, that in my opinion if you want something different in daffodils you'll have to get them from the west coast growers -- as they grow the something different for the eastern growers.

Daffodils are chiefly produced here on the Pacific coast. Large numbers in the Willamette valley and in the Columbia river valley, and large numbers in the Puget Sound country. The something different in this line isn't necessarily obtained from the far-off grower but rather by buying a bulb or two of the most expensive sorts. You'll find that not too many of your neighbors are growing the flowers from $25, $40 or even $250 bulbs -- although they may have something just as nice.

Those of you who are contemplating putting in daffodils or narcissus should get busy. You'll find that the bulb men are already out of many of the varieties you had planned on getting -- at least, that's what I found this past week.

W. A. D. wants to know if the osmunda fern is hardy here. He had grown some in North Carolina.

Ans: I see no reason why it shouldn't be. It is hardy in Wisconsin and Minnesota. It needs lots of water, good drainage and a fibrous soil.

S. L. wants to know if there are cacti which will stand our frosts here in the Willamette valley.

Ans: It isn't the frosts that get some of the hardy cacti down here in the valley. It is the continued moisture. Some of the cacti grow native on the Wyoming mountainsides and take much colder weather than we have here. But the drainage is perfect. I have talked to gardeners who have grown the opuntias for a few years, but I have found no one who says it is long-lived in our wetish climate.

The old-fashioned grass pinks, distinguished by a clove-like fragrance, are also in this group. When I was a youngster, I always associated them with Memorial day because so many grew in borders around the graves in the old Silvertown cemetery and they were in bloom when the school children marched to the cemetery on that day.

In local gardens here in the valley they have been replaced by the Allwoods, a cross (I believe) between the grass pink and the carnation. This strain takes its name from the original hybridizers, the Allwood Brothers of England.

"Seeds from these will give flowers the second season. Cuttings may be rooted. The dianthus do somewhat better if grown in an alkaline soil than in an acid soil.

Anthraxoze is the worst disease of the pinks. It causes death of the branches of hardy pinks, the leaves first turning yellow and then brown. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture will control this. Taking new cuttings and planting in new soil are also good controls. The Allwoods come in a great variety of color, from pure white

'Capt. Eddie', 'Corn is Green' Capital Movies

A stirring tribute to the dignity of man--and to his ability to rise from the ignorance to which he is sometimes forced to dwell -- is vividly achieved in Warner Bros. newest screen drama, "The Corn Is Green," now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Starring Bette Davis as Miss Moffat, a determined English school teacher who discovers, in an untutored young miner, the spark of genius that sometimes leads to greatness, the film's action takes places against a background of poverty and barrenness so common to the mining province of Wales at the turn of the last century.

Supporting Bette Davis are a host of capable players, among them John Dall and Joan Loring, screen newcomers, and Nigel Bruce, Rhys Williams, Rosalind Ivan and Arthur Shields. Adapted for the screen by Casey Robinson and Frank Cavett from the Herman Shumlin production of Emlyn Williams' successful stage play "The Corn Is Green" was directed by Irving Rapper and produced by Jack Chertok.

Also playing is "Captain Eddie" with Fred MacMurray.

Elsinore's 'Rhapsody' Brings Success to Unknown Actor

"Success in the show business by my thirtieth birthday! Otherwise, I'll put an end to this miserable life--its uncertainty, its homeless wandering, its genteel poverty."

That was the resolution made by Hollywood's newest star, unfulfilled a year ago, and perilously close to having remained unfulfilled by his thirtieth birthday.

The star is Robert Alda, who was catapulted from obscurity in burlesque to stardom in the role of George Gershwin in Warner Bros.' great biographical film, "Rhapsody in Blue," currently at the Elsinore.

Married and the father of a nine-year-old son, the new star spent more than fifteen years touring the burlesque and vaudeville houses of the country, trailing his little family most of the time.

On Alda's last visit there, however, he met Steve Trilling, who was impressed, and Trilling brought him to the attention of Jack L. Warner, executive producer.

When Alda heard the part he was being considered for, which was much sought after by many established screen players, he became so nervous that he was unable to eat for three days. Finally, the word came through that he had the job, and he almost collapsed from joy.

Also starring in the musical biography of the immortal composer are Joan Leslie, Charles Coburn, Alexis Smith and numerous celebrities of stage and screen who figured prominently in George Gershwin's life.

North Howell Family Host To Seattle Folk

NORTH HOWELL -- Guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Patterson this week are Mrs. Frances Witham, Mrs. Kenneth Babbit and her two little daughters of Seattle. The families were friends in South Dakota.

Mrs. J. H. Howard and little son Jimmy of Portland are at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bump, for a few days.

Vacationing at coast points for the past two weeks are Mrs. W. M. Oddie and Mrs. C. E. Waltman.

Sgt. and Mrs. Alan Wiesner, who have been visiting his parents, left Saturday for several days at Newport and other coast points.

Mr. and Mrs. George Bewley and family of Lane county have moved to the J. J. Jackson house and will assist with the dairy work.

ZENA -- Among the successful hunting parties this year was that which included Kenneth Hunt, Walter B. Hunt, Ted Burns and Vivian Cochran. They came back from Burns with a fine deer.

Farcical 'Town Went Wild' Amuses Grand Audiences

James Lydon, co-star with Freddie Bartholomew in a farce of small-town life, "The Town Went Wild," now at the Grand Theatre, was once hailed as "The Typical American Boy," a title acquired when years ago he posed for advertising artists and photographers.

Now 21 years old, Lydon was born at Harrington Park N. J., and decided to become an actor when he was 10. With his appearance--reddish chestnut hair, blue eyes, a contagious smile and freckles, it wasn't hard for him to get started as a model. Then came the stage, the radio and his debut in motion pictures in 1939, in "Back Door to Heaven," a Paramount picture directed by William K. Howard, who just this year directed him in another picture, "When the Lights Go On Again."

He sprang to fame, however, as the "Henry Aldrich" of Paramount's famous "Aldrich Family" series pictures, and having outgrown the teen-age high school lad with changing, unsteady voice whose attempts to be helpful wound up almost in disaster, he turned to free-lancing, and was signed for several pictures, the latest of which is "The Town Went Wild." In this, he portrays a youth of 20 who is completely bewildered by the farcical turn of events in which he is found to have been switched to another family, whom his father despises, following his birth, and the infant born to the other family switched to his.

Edward Everett Horton and Tom Tully are featured in the picture, while Jill Browning supplies the romantic interest as Lydon's sister, with whom the other boy is in love.

James Lydon, Freddie Bartholomew and Jill Browning in the comedy hit "The Town Went Wild," now at the Grand.

Four Assigned To Work With Safety Council

H. R. Miller, Einar Nelson, C. L. (Sam) Brown and W. O. Hammon, former fieldman of the accident prevention division of the state industrial accident commission, have been transferred from field service duties and have been assigned to specialized work with safety committee of Oregon firms under the workmen's compensation act, it was announced by Paul E. Gurske, chairman of the commission, in a report to the Oregon Safety week committee.

In addition to attending safety committee meetings of these industrial firms, assistance will be given in plant safety inspections made by safety committees and new safety committees will be organized through the cooperation of management and employees.

A feature of the work of the educational department of the division is the showing of safety films and each of these men is provided with films and projectors. Safety talks also are given to groups of employes whenever possible.

Territories have been assigned as follows:--Miller, Marion, Polk, Tillamook, Clackamas, Lincoln, Benton and Yamhill counties; Hammon, Lane, Linn, Douglas, Coos and Curry counties; Nelson, Multnomah, Columbia, Washington, Clatsop, Hood River and Wasco counties; Brown, Jackson, Josephine, Klamath, Lake, Deschutes and Crook counties.
