Doe Urges Businessmen to Find Places for Veterans

"To bridge the gap between legal rights and a normal existence for returning veterans" is the duty and the privilege of his hometown residents, particularly the businessmen, Rilea D. Doe, vice president of Safeway Stores, Inc., maintained here Monday.

Addressing the Salem Chamber of Commerce luncheon meeting, Doe, who is on Rotary International's committee dealing with that organization's service to returning veterans, declared that "the veteran's future, rightly stated, is not a problem—veterans are less a problem than their often-well-meaning parents."

If every Salem business man would be sure that veterans seeking employment in his establishment are given the proper type of interview, a great step toward getting veterans back into normal conditions would have been taken, Doe said.

If Each Employed One
If every business house in the city would employ even just one veteran, a large portion of the returning group would be employed, he maintained. "No concern of yours? Why isn't it?" he asked.
