On the Shelf

Food and Other Items Appearing on Shelves Cause Little Flurry Now

By Maxine Buren

That malady which gripped householders during the war years and made them rush to the store to pick up scarce items whether needed or not, seems to have left as quickly as it appeared.

No longer does the housewife dash to the store when her neighbor reports a scarce article is in stock. No longer does her pulse rise and her breath become labored when she sees a "limit, one" sign on an item. Nor does she send every member of her family to buy the allotted one.

That panicky feeling that used to come when the householder just missed the last of the grocer's stock seems no longer to grip her. The disappointed buyer knows now that there will be more in stock soon.

The woman who used to call the meat man in the middle of the week and say, "please save me a seven pound veal roast for Sunday," now that meat is more abundant calls and say, "send me out a three pound roast." It isn't that the family appetite has dwindled, it's just that the fever is gone.

Steaks and chops are now on display in the shops, but there's no riot.

Shoe stores on Wednesday entertained no riots, no queue of men and women stood for hours to buy shoes, released from ration lists. In fact, shoe stores reported an unusually quiet day. Nobody seemed elated because shoe rationing was off, and no one seemed to need new ones in a rush.

The past week we've noticed a good many more things in market, individual sized breakfast cereal packages are again with us, more commercially baked cookies have appeared more canned fruits are in market. Paper products are more available.

Mayonnaise is seen more often in the grocery stores and sweet pickles are again on the shelves. Candy, at a surprising price, is available in larger quantities almost anywhere.

We note also, that more prepared flour mixes (muffins, gingerbread, etc.) which contain fats, are being shown on the shelves again. Some meat products in jars are showing up in displays and a few more soups are now available.

It won't be long now, when rationing and all its woes are forgotten and we'll hardly recall that we ever had trouble getting things. It's always that way.

How to master the art of coffee making

Making a cup of good coffee is really an art, but a simple art in which anyone can become adept. There are about five rules that have become second nature to me in brewing coffee at home. Perhaps it's their very simplicity that spells success... what would you say?

1. First and foremost, I select the proper grind for the type of coffee maker I expect to use in brewing the coffee. This, of course, eliminates my having to have vacuum-packed coffee reground. It has been my experience that having already-ground coffee put through the grinder a second time too often results in loss of flavor and aroma of the coffee. And the brew made from twice-ground coffee is usually cloudy and bitter. (NOTE: Many of you, I know, prefer whole-bean coffee which is ground right at the grocers at the time of purchase. A delicious brew can be obtained by this method if you remember that just one grinding is sufficient.)
2. I MEASURE both coffee and freshly boiling water accurately. I know it is important to use the same exact proportions every time coffee is made to be sure it will always taste the same. A good rule of thumb for coffee that is rich in flavor, as well as strength, is one heaping tablespoon (or two level tablespoons) of coffee to each 6-oz. cup, or 3/4 standard measuring cup, of freshly boiling water.
3. I TIME my coffee-making carefully. The coffee should be in contact with the water for a definite length of time, depending on the type and capacity of your coffee-maker, as well as the strength of beverage desired.
4. I make it a point to SERVE coffee SOON after it is made. Cool coffee cannot be reheated without, injuring its flavor.
5. I CLEAN the coffee-maker daily, and at least twice a month give it a baking soda bath to keep it "sweet."
