Last Day

Hostess Who Knows Her Turkey, Has Enough and Not too Much to Serve

By Maxine Buren

Now about the turkey.

To have just enough turkey, not too much, and certainly not too little, is the desire of every Thanksgiving hostess. Most women like to have plenty for at least a meal or two after Thanksgiving day, and no one seems to fear suffering from too much turkey, although its long been a favorite joke with comedians.

Economy comes with larger birds anyway, because there is more proportion of meat to bone in large turkeys than small. Therefore it is real economy to buy not too small a turkey.

If you are choosing a turkey over 14 pounds, experts say you should buy a tom turkey. It under 14 pounds, buy a hen. A tom that size is apt to be immature, a hen over 14 pounds is too old.

Now as to amount to allow. The experts again come to our rescue and say allow 3/4 pound to one pound dressed weight for each person to be served. That's supposed to serve for the main meal only, but it depends partly on the generosity of the carver. I've been to meals where one pound would have served half a dozen from the servings given. A pound is a good sized amount and should be ample if the hostess does not plan too many second meals.

the old fashioned roaster method of cooking turkey and get down the aluminum or gray speckled enamel utensil once or twice a year. But modern cooks find that what the experts say about slow cooking is true. They merely put the fowl in a shallow pan, set the oven to 350 degrees and leave it for several hours. Time for cooking is longer, but the resulting bird is thought to be juicier and to have shrunk less, and the method is just about the simplest thing one could hope for.

Here are time charts, they allow less time per hour for larger birds, and after the fowl gets to be a certain size time should not be extended much per pound.

- 10 lb. turkey—3 hrs. 30 min.
- 12 lbs.—4 hrs. 40 min.
- 15 lbs.—4 hrs. 40 min.
- 18 lbs.—4 hrs. 40 min.
- 20 lbs.—5 hrs.

Above 20 lbs. allow about 10 minutes per pound extra. Experts say (and I've never checked carefully on this) that for a 10 pound turkey you need 9 cups bread to make dressing, and for birds over 10 pounds allow two cups less than the number of pounds of the turkey (10 cups for 12 pound bird, 14 cups for 16 pound bird, 18 cups for 20 pound bird).

A ten pound turkey makes about 3 to 4 cups well flavored gravy.

Chin Up Club Has Sunday Party

The Chin Up club of Oregon was given a party Sunday at the Hope Presbyterian church in Portland. The hostess was Miss Avis Fleetwood.

Mr. Floyd Hamman furnished a private bus for Salem, Woodburn and Canby members for the party. Governor Snell and Mr. Floyd J. Cook helped with other expenses.

Sunday, November 15, the club will have a party in Portland at Sacred Heart church. There will be a white elephant sale to which the public may contribute through the president, Beth Sellwood, Rt. 2, Box 336, Salem, before Friday.
