Gardening Today

This past week has been much more conducive to indoor gardening than outdoor. Picture gardening in books and catalogues is quite attractive again. Advertisements have many more interesting listings than in recent years.

Hyacinths, which have been definitely low, again are being offered. Holland is exporting, all Lillis Madsen the advertisements tell us. Some new ones, but also many old friends are listed, including the white L' Innocence; the soft Rose Lady Derby, the pink Marconi, the sky blue Perle Brillant.

You almost can smell the lilacs on the racemes pictured in the catalogues and garden magazine advertisements. Before me are pictured the red-purple Charles Joly, the old reliable double white Edith Carvell and the light blue double Olivier deSerre. But the pictures of Edith Carvell are no better than my own were last spring in the garden. I have never seen such large clusters of lilac bloom as the Edith Carvell produced in Willamette valley gardens last spring.

Also pictured this month are a number of trilliums such as the 15-inch tall purple, followed by red fruit; the lemon yellow trillium, with its mottled green leaves, and about nine inches tall, and the rose-colored trillium growing about 18 inches tall.

Answers to Questions: Mrs. D. Y. asks for information on Lady's Mantle.

Ans.: This is a low-growing rock garden plant, a hardy perennial belonging to the rose family. Alchemilla is the botanical name. The roots may be divided here in the Willamette valley either in November or April.

S. G. G. asks for information on Naked-Lady, Sweet Rocket and rosemallow.

Ans.: Rose-mallow is a common name for hibiscus, a showy-flowered herb, sometimes shrublike. The flowers come in white, pink or crimson. It needs quite a bit of sun to do well. It will grow here, however. Sweet rocket is the common name for Hesperis matronalis. Sometimes it is called Dames-violet. It is a hardy perennial.

Eddie Bracken, Crosby's Voice Capitol Treat

Eddie Bracken says he's been "swooned." Now starring with Veronica Lake and Diana Lynn in Paramount's "Out of This World," at the Capitol theatre, Bracken has a peeve. By some slick camera leg-erdmain, Eddie croons in the kind of way responsible for sending the bobby-soxers and their maiden aunts out of this world.

But here's the hitch. "The Voice" the screen youngsters hear belongs to "the groaner"—Bing Crosby. To make matters worse, Bing's four kids, also appearing in the film, join the fun by ribbing the airwaves' newest sensation with "doesn't that voice sound familiar?"

It all starts when Eddie, a Western Union messenger boy, stumbles across Diana and her all-girl glamour band. She hires him to sing with the band at some charity function, at which time publicity-wise Veronica stages a convincing swoon. This stunt makes "Life" and from then on it's fame, fortune and headaches for the Bracken boy wonder who wins fame on the radio.

Despite all this, Eddie says he can forgive screen writers Arthur Phillips and Walter De Leon for cheating him out of an honest-to-goodness fling at singing because he ends up with lovely Diana in his arms!

Ans.: This is one of the sweet marjorams which is used for flavoring dressings and meat dishes. This name was commonly used in some of the older garden books but it little referred to in the newer ones. Usually it is grown as an annual. The seeds are sown in flats and the tiny plants are pricked out into other flats. The seeds are very small and easily buried too deeply. The foliage is gathered just before the flowering period sets in.

William Eythe and Signe Hasso find their paths inevitably intertwined in 20th Century-Fox's electrifying drama of one of the toughest, most relentless man-hunts in history, brought to the screen in "The House on 92nd Street," now at the Grand.

HOLLYWOOD By GENE HANDSAKER

BOB HOPE IS A FULLTIME GAGMAN

HOLLYWOOD—Nearly everything about Bob Hope is a gag. Even the red bicycle he rides from his dressing room to the set carries a sign to warn borrowers: "Drop it, brother! Bob Hope." The quips tossed off between camera takes by the guy with the scoop nose and underling jaw are as funny as any that get into his pictures.

The director called for quiet, and in the distance a carpenter's foreman sang out melodiously to his crew: "Ho-o-old that hammer!"

"Amazing the jobs that guy Vallee gets," Bob remarked, smacking his gum. He chews it incessantly, tucking it into a corner of his mouth when called upon to act.

Bob is currently making his version of the 1924 Rudolph Valentino starrer, "Monsieur Beaucaire." Clad in purple satin knee-breeches and square-cut coat with lace collar, he rushed around an eighteenth century royal Spanish apartment, frantically concealing beautiful ladies behind chairs, tables, screens.

"Another week of this and I'll be ready to fight Joe Louis!" he cried finally, flopping into a big cloth-covered chair.

He looked tired. A Victory Bond show had kept him up late the night before, and he had been at the studio since 7:15 in the morning. Around his brown eyes were little lines. In his dark brown hair, matted by the white wig he had just yanked off, were threads of gray.

It's curtains for Eddie Bracken when Diana Lynn's around in Paramount's "Out of This World," now at Capitol theatre. Eddie, who co-stars with Veronica Lake and Diana, plays the role of an idealized crooner whose voice has that familiar Crosby ring. Bing probably wanted to be represented somehow in order to keep tabs on his four youngsters who make their film debut in this musical comedy hit.

Joan Crawford in 'Pierce' Thriller Now at Elsinore

"Mildred Pierce," Warner Bros.' distinguished production of James Cain's engrossing tale of a tainted wife, starring Joan Crawford, Zachary Scott and Jack Carson, is now playing at the Elsinore. The exciting odyssey of a grass widow, "Mildred Pierce" provides Joan Crawford with the finest role of her career and audiences with the most absorbing movie experience in years.

"Mildred Pierce" is three ways great. As a description of mother-love, it is affecting and poignant. It is fascinating, too, as a sharp and accurate what-makes-'em-tick analysis of the soul of a heel. And it is a tense, gripping, superior-caliber murder mystery. Considered in any one of these categories, "Mildred Pierce" would be rated an outstanding film. Successfully blending all three, it is something special for

William Eythe Stars in Grand Theatre Film

Almost as nerve-shattering as the suspense-filled drama "The House on 92nd Street," was the actual filming of the picture now playing at the Grand theatre, starring William Eythe, Lloyd Nolan and Signe Hasso.

The script, written from records on file with the FBI, demanded the utmost accuracy and realism.

Arrangements were made in New York with the owners to use offices, beauty parlors, book stores and hotel lobbies needed as settings for vital scenes in the script. But to shoot the action on the streets, a means had to be devised without causing crowds to gather. This problem was solved by the FBI when they loaned the company one of their special surveillance vehicles which they use for secret photography. Inside, the camera crew could point their lenses in any direction without being seen, while the stars played scenes right in the heart of New York.
