Don't Look Now...

but... A Salem schoolteacher this week intercepted a note from a very small girl to a very handsome little boy. The note said "I love you, I love you, do you love me" and down in a corner were two squares labeled "yes" and "no," ready for him to check and return. The teacher concluded that the reason she is a spinster is that she never told any smart man to sign on the dotted line.

Machine age... For untold generations, children have tried to blow bigger and better bubbles, now comes a gadget where hundreds of small and large ones come from a mere breath across the top. Watching some boys today, we wondered if they get the fun we used to, when we worked hard for each beautiful big opalescent bubble that came from a white clay pipe, and mother's very best white hand soap.

New role... Imagine the surprise of the Pioneer (Peeping Tom to his friends) when he woke up on Thursday morning to find his beautiful gold beard a mass of white icicles. With a little red paint, he could have been made into a beautiful Santa Claus.

Untried... Of course we haven't tried it yet, but why couldn't a shopper merely leave his car double parked across from the liquor store and go about his last minute Christmas shopping. How would anyone notice just one extra little car cluttering up the street over there?
