Reading Advertisements Give Ideas On Modern Trends in Manufacturing

By Maxine Buren

Important to general reading for moderns, we are told, are the comics. Some writers contend that to be really on your toes, you must know the latest developments in the case of Dick Tracy, the Bumsteads, and others. From the number of allusions made to comic strip characters in newspapers and on the radio it would seem that this is true.

But look carefully at advertisements in the better magazines and newspapers and you'll realize too that it's important to read advertisements carefully, not always for ideas on what to buy, but to keep up with modern inventions and new trends. Advertisements at their best are really sources of education. You'll learn a lot about new radios that may help in selecting the kind best suited to your needs, you'll find informative material about new fabrics, about laundering and caring for them. Advertisements reveal coming uses for plastics and the reader will be aided in proper choice of products when new things come getting other things for home, All From Meat The illustration shows a collection of gifts beneath the Christmas tree, and describes why these articles were missing from many trees the past few years. A footstool depends upon the meat industry for its curled hair stuffing and animal glue between joints. Drum and banjo heads, a belt, traveling case and handbag are made of leather. Toilet soap of animal fats and oils, beauty cream of skin softening lanolin refined from wool fat. Gelatine in many candies and richness in caramels come from animal sources. Lard gives short-into the market. Of course automobile advertisements give some mighty good information on what we will want in cars when our chance comes.

This morning we noted an informative advertisement titled, "A Very Merry Christmas From the Meat Industry" which set us thinking about the importance of common everyday commodities in this past war, and recalled the reasons why, when such products as meats, come into the market sgain in full abundance, we'll be Much of our health is dependent on by products of the meat industry too. Laboratories produce health giving chemicals.

What is true of the meat industry is also true of others in a lesser way perhaps. So reading the ads isn't merely a case of checking on what you want to buy, but is part of your educa-

Bay City Urged To Purchase Water System

COOS BAY, Dec. 27-(AP)-Purchase of the water system here for $373,000 was recommended today by the Coos Bay water district commission. An election to accept the report and issue bonds is set for January 21. Ben R. Chandler, commission chairman, said a favorable vote would mean completion of the sale by early February.

Included in the recommendations are filtration plant, mains, distributing system, and office building of the People's Water and Gas company.

The commission said the pricc was substantially under appraised value of the property, bought recently by R. H. Sherritt, New York City, president of the Sargen company, for $450,000. The transaction involved other property.
