Quartet in Entertaining Program

By Maxine Buren

One of the liveliest musical evenings in a long time was spent on Tuesday night at Waller hall by an all too small audience which heard the famed Gordon string quartet. Chamber music is supposed to be the highest form, yet that night it also proved a most interesting one.

Jacques Gordon, first violin and founder of the group, showed his musicianship as leader of the quartet. Kras Malno fascinated listeners with the rich melody of his viola, and tall Fritz Magg proved no less of an artist at the 'cello. Urico Rossi, second violinist, who appeared to be youngest of the group, was an excellent supporting musician.

But three numbers were on the printed program, and although long, allowed no dull moments. The program opened with Haydn's quartet in E flat major, op. 33 No. 2, a vigorous composition in which the artists used their opportunity to show just what fine work they could do. The second, quartet in E minor by Smetana, was of equal interest, opening with a melodious allegro vivo appassionato movement and closing with the lively vivace.

For the final group, Beethoven's quartet, opus 135 was substituted for opus 18, for the simple reason, as the leader announced, he picked up the wrong suitcase as he ran for the bus, leaving the music in Portland. This was a lovely number, lively and bright and with a touch of humor. Mr. Gordon explained that it is one of Beethoven's greatest.

Encores were a serenade by Haydn and a humorous polka by Shostakovich. The audience almost insisted on more encores, but the artists only returned for certain calls.

Generally, townspeople should attend more concerts in Waller hall, which for some reason seems to keep them away. Many good musical hours can be spent there, often free. Artists would welcome larger audiences.
