8-Cent Fare Plea Enters Bus Strike Scene Federal Mine Seizure

By Wendell Webb Managing Editor, The Statesman

Salem's bus patrons, long used to a 7-cent fare, will have ito pungle up 8 cents per ride If Oregon Motor Stages are ever to operate in this city again, it appeared today.

This was the paramount item which appeared through the have of cross-statements that greeted The Statesman's ex-haustive efforts yesterday and last night to find out exactly what had happened and was happening in regard to the bus tieup which began five weeks

The answer to what was happening, as of yesterday, was "nothing."

So far as the company was soncerned-"we have just come as far as we can; there is only so much to put out." (This quotes E. Royce, president of Oregon Motor Stages, and B. Wilson, comptroller, who visited Salem yesterday.

So far as the union is concerned - "we have received no concrete proposals from the company recently." (This quotes Ted Beguin, motor coach union business agent in Portland, via telephone.) Both the company and union spokesmen said they were "anxious to get the buses rolling" and that they recognized "Salem is the innocent victim."

The picture in brief appears to be this:

1. The company says all things at issue in the ticup (which affects Salem and Eugene city service and also overthe-road bus schedules out of

ers

Portland) are settled except that (a) the company can pay increased rates to $1.271/2 an hour for over-the-road drivers, whereas the union asks $1.30, and (b) the company wants drivers to accept standing passengers within a 20-mile radius, and the union will not agree.

2. The union says these differences exist but also that the company has set as a condition of paying $1.15 to Salem driv-(they previously got 95 cents) the raising of fares in Salem from 7 to 8 cents.

Royce and Wilson, of the stage line, Thursday said they had been assured "by city councilmen" that such a raise could be effected and therefore that the union had no excuse for saying that there was a "condition" to the $1.15 offer. The union has indicated the issues.

The Oregon Statesman

FOUNDED 1851

Salem, Oregon, Friday Morning, May 10, 1946

So far as separating the road-$1.15 would be acceptable. There were reports of an exofficio meeting between the union, the company and a Salem citizen committee today. And at 5 p.m. the union and company officials will meet with members of the city council. The 8-cent fare discussion. It was disclosed, reached a climax at a meeting in the Senator drivers. hotel one night last week. The details of those discussions are so variable in their telling that to review the meeting would serve little purpose.

The paramount fact was that the matter, as it stood today, apparently found both sides plainly ready to resume negotiations but also convinced they had found no common ground on which to resolve remaining driver and stand-up issues is concerned, so that Salem and Eugene service could be resumed, the union cites its long standing charter saying that there should be no specific settlement for any part of the organization, constituting (1) Salem and Eugene drivers, (2) mechanics, (3) over-the-road

Company spokesmen have in-sisted there should be separate unions for Portland and elsewhere, (there are about 35 Sadrivers, 35 Eugene drivers, and 170 members in Portland and over-the-road), and that such a plan would permit resumption here.

In the meantime, Salem-except for emergency service walks.

The state ought to assist the weaker communities in maintaining good schools, but that burden is not implied in the constitutional provision the school people are forever quoting. Their case for state aid is strong enough to stand on its own merits and not on a very shaky definition of a word in the old constitution. Let's have done with throwing this provision of the constitution in our faces, and get down to the practical question of how the state can supplement the income of local districts. Even the proposed initiative for $50 per chool child doesn't tackle that mestion.
