five years since they tangled first time, in the Polo grounds, just across the Harlem river from the stadium. Realizing he needed a knockout to keep his championship that night, Joe put the lights out for Billy in the 13th round, after Sweet William had piled up a commanding lead on his boxing skill and speed and supreme confidence that he can whip any man in the world using fists alone. The return match was a "natural" then. It's even more of a "seven-and-eleven" now. what with money as free as a night shirt flapping in the breeze on a clothes line, Louis apparently feeling his 32 years and

Conn-developing late, like most Irish athletes-seemingly hitting his peak at 28.

This will be the 22nd time Joe has put the ring's richest bauble on the line since he hammered Cinderella Man Jim Braddock into unconsciousness nine years ago next Saturday to start the longest reign of any champion from the point of view of title defense. Yet old pop time and a four-year layoff since he put his gloves in mothballs and went on Uncle Sam's payroll have left their mark on him. He misses his friend and trainer, the late Jack Blackburn. He still packs the punch of a blockbuster, but in his training he has been a slow-moving target, thumped surprisingly freelyand often-by his sparmates, and still unable to "set" to punch when an opponent confuses him by sudden moves. Conn, on the other hand, appears even faster than he was five years ago. He has spared 260 training rounds, compared to Joe's 140. He's what Louis, himself, calls a "full-grown" heavyweight now, at over 180 pounds, compared to the 174 he carried the last time. This added avoirdupois, most of it in his shoulders and neck, makes him a better puncher, although he has no intentions of trying for a knockout over Louis. Joe will weigh a solid 210.
