Apricots on the Way for Canning, But Housewife Should Watch for Best Buys

Apricots are coming up—and according to the grocer, we should be sure they are canned at least next week. They are just beginning to come in for canning now.

Raspberries are just about gone, youngberries are coming on and logans are in the market in very small quantities.

Let's take berries first. Most of the berries, that is, all except strawberries, are treated alike. For freezing, recommended way is to put down without sugar if to be used for pies or puddings. Sugar at the rate of one cup for each two quarts, is suggested for berries to be eaten for sauce. Drain as much as possible after washing, pack loosely in the containers and put in the locker as soon as possible. It is not necessary to leave space in top of the container when packing berries dry, as they settle plenty before frozen.

To can the berries, make a syrup to the proportion of 1 cup sugar to every 2 quarts berries, and add water to the proportion of 1 cup sugar to two of water. Let boil up and pour over fruit packed in the jars. Set into hot water bath, bring as quickly to a boil as possible and count 20 minutes for cooking. If packed hot, experts advise cooking in a water bath.

The stirred raspberry jam which has proved as popular this year as in the past, will work nicely with these berries.

Apricots seem small this year, but the grocer says the Tiltons will all be small. The apricot season lasts only a very short while, so it is suggested that women contact their fruit dealers and determine the best day to buy from him. Tiltons are the most popular canning variety but there are others too including Blenheim and Mogpuck.

If the apricots are to be skinned, they can be scalded, like peaches. Some have and pit them, others prefer the stronger flavor of the whole fruit. Many women do not remove the skins.

Personally I prefer all larger fruits to be hot packed, that is to be boiled a few minutes in the syrup before packing, as I believe the flavor is better, and syrup penetrates and produces a better product. Prepare the fruit as you wish, peeling or seeding or neither. Drop into a medium syrup, 1 cup sugar, 2 cups water, and bring to a boil. Dip fruit into clear jars, add syrup as desired and put on the lids. Add more fruit to the syrup left in the pan, adding more syrup if necessary and repeat process. Set the hot jars into the hot bath and bring to a boil. Allow 15 minutes for boiling. In can the fruit packed in the jars, without precooking, allow 25 minutes.

If to be frozen, dip in boiling water 1/2 minute to prevent discoloration and pack in the containers with sugar.
