Plant Output About 10 Tons Each Month

An average production of 20,000 pounds of mushrooms a month at the West Mushroom company, 4949 E State st, now makes it the largest plant of its kind in the morthwest, Roland E. West, owner said Friday

The plant now has 17 of the large, heated houses in which the mush coms grow in shallow wooder, travi, which are placed six high in racks. West says that this years $40,000 building program will add another four houses to the plant. He is expanding into the production of strained baby foods with first production about August 15

The West Foods division of the operations, which do the mushroom processing and canning, also can preserves. All production will soon be marketed under the new government certified grade program of the department of agriculture. West said. Under this plan a government inspector will be stationed at the factory to grade the products and they will bear a government certified grade on their labels.

Growing cycle of the mushrooms in the houses is about six weeks. The fungus bacteria from which the mushrooms develop are "planted" in a bed filled with a compost made of straw and chemhais. After three weeks' growth the beds are covered with a laver of dat through which the mushrooms come up in another three weeks and are picked.

Mushroom growing has become a large scientific industry since the days when only mushrooms were grown in dark home basements. West says. He came from California, where he had learned the pusiness, 10 years ago to start the plant here. He employs 30 people the year around in the pour t which is located under large oak ties which give the products the Shady Oak trade mark

Most of the produce is sold in Onegon, Washington and Califorrule West says. About four-fifths of the rational mushroom production a in the area around Penn-By. ellia
