the voting records of all members of congress on 12 issues of major importance to the American people

Calling the compilation of congressmen voted a for citizens in determining how they will cast their ballots, the CIO and its political action committee said in their joint publication that they were not setting up a blacklist or a list of endorsed candidates. The publication continued:

This is a record of the 79th congress that failed to act on many of the most important issues affecting the welfare of the people Congress mangled price control. It looked the other way on housing. It buried health and minimum wage legislation It refused even to debate the question of an extended fair employment practices committee, to abolish racial discrimination. It failed to act on the anti-poll tax bill It watered down the full employment
