Experts Prefer Corn off Cob for Freezing: Housewives Agree

By Maxine Buren
Women's Editor, The Statesman

While corn on the cob is one of the year's most popular vegetables, officials of the federal agricultural department reluctantly admit it is one of the least successful vegetables to freeze.

The commercial pack is smaller than that of 15 other vegetables they tell us, and is even below past years. It just isn't what most people want when served at the table, say the experts, and furthermore it takes up lots of room in a crowded locker.

However, people still pack it—and many seem to like it. So the scientists have conducted some experiments to give the public the very best information on freezing corn on the cob. Doughiness seems to be the result of incorrect maturity of the ears, they say. Too young corn tends to be watery and over-ripe corn becomes doughy when cooked. The corn is only at its prime a very short time. Golden Bantam they say is one of the best varieties for freezing.

Directions are: scald husked, cleaned ears for 4 to 6 minutes. Cool quickly, drain, wrap individually and freeze at zero or lower. Thaw before cooking.

Corn off the cob has a different story, for it is easy to freeze and results in a product which has nice flavor. Scald ears from 8 to 10 minutes, cool and cut from cob. Dry pack, with a little salt.

Corn can be canned with a pressure cooker, scald, cool and cut from cob. Pack into jars not larger than pints and process in the pressure cooker for 105 minutes (1 hour and 45 minutes) at 10 pounds pressure.
