Don't Look Now...

but... hold in the highest esteem the little lady with the stained fingers and strained back, for it is she who harvests the crop from the "world's largest walnut orchard"—in the backyards of Salem. She rushes out of a morning and evening, to snatch nuts from under the wheels of Dad's car as he goes in or out of the driveway, she picks them from among the shrubs and combs them from lengthening tall grass and leaves. Then dries them over the radiator in kitchen or back hall, shells the broken ones and sits back never realizing the truth when Dad and the boys boast to guests of the huge crop of walnuts they harvested.

The You-Can't-Win Dept.... We find these are two ways to get through the new Center street signals from east to west: 1—As each green light is passed, cut 'er down to stalling speed, and by the time you start up the engine a time or two, you'll just about make the next green light; or 2—Drive east on Chemeketa to Church, then two blocks north to Marion, thence west to North Front and south on North Front to Center. Then nose into the line at the bridge (which has gone through the signals), watching carefully for angry drivers who may be wrought up after their harrowing experience with stalled engine. It works all right, providing everyone else didn't have the same idea.

Unexpected guest... you've heard people complain that nothing ever happens here? Well, we don't worry about that in our family. My car has a reputation for harboring about everything: rubber boots, tow chains, hammers, shovels, chewing gum, scotch tape, nails and empty pop bottles. Monday, after shaking wild plums on a neighbors hillside with me, my sister-in-law got into my heavily loaded car and sat down -- screaming she got up immediately; she had sat on a snake in the seat. Now I don't mind so much her sitting on the snake, what I wonder is, how long had I been snuggling up to the thing from my driver's seat!

Oh by the way... I'm driving over to eastern Washington next weekend, into the rattlesnake country that is. I might be able to pick up something interesting over there. Maxine Buren

Mill City Newspaper Interest Is Sold to Wolverton of New York

STAYTON—David Epps, owner of the Mill City Enterprise, announced this week that he has disposed of a half interest in the paper to Charles Wolverton, for the past five years on the editorial staff of a Scripps-Howard newspaper in New York City.

Wolverton has been in newspaper work in the east for many years. With his wife and four children, he is now in Mill City.

Epps purchased the Mill City weekly last February from the C. L. McKittrick estate. Before that the Enterprise had been operated by Paul Robinson.
