Miss Bush, 86, One of City's First Citizens

(Story also on page 1)
 Miss Sally Bush, 86, who died Sunday at her Mission and South Church street home, had spent her entire life in Salem with the exception of a few years in eastern schools.
 As a girl, Miss Bush went to the Sacred Heart Academy in Salem, and then attended Moravian Seminary at Bethlehem, Pa., from which her mother was graduated. She also went to the Martha Burnham school in Northampton, Mass., and then to Smith college where she finished with the class of '83.
 Returning to Salem then, she maintained the household for her father until he died, and since that time has kept up the home and spacious grounds which comprised one of Salem's outstanding landmarks and show-places for many years.
 Miss Bush limited her affiliations primarily to the Unitarian church and the Salem Garden club and carried on her many charities without ostentation. Much of her time, since the death of her father in 1913, had been spent caring for her garden and its many rare shrubs and flowers gathered from all parts of the world. Her personal knowledge of the large collection made her widely recognized as an authority of floriculture.
 The wooded land and meadow which comprised the 100-acre Bush pasture tract, on which Miss Bush's home is situated, eventually will become a park. Fifty-three acres of the tract were donated to the city by Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Bush 30 years ago, with the land to become a park commemorating Asahel Bush, father of Miss Sally and A. N.
 The city and Willamette university acquired the remaining 43 acres early this year, and work already has been started on Willamette's portion where an athletic field is laid out. It is specified that with Miss Sally Bush's death, the only portion of the tract which must remain unchanged during the lifetime of her brother, A. N. Bush, is that upon which the home is situated.

 The natural beauty of the home tract, enhanced by Miss Sally Bush's own care during her long residence, has given rise to many expressions of hope that there will be little change in this area as developed.

Pen Escapee Returned by Own Father

Henry Wennebo, 19, who escaped from the state penitentiary here October 24, was returned to the institution Sunday by his father, a resident of Portland.
 After making his escape Wennebo hid out until Friday night when he obtained a ride into Portland and went to his father's home. He is serving a term for automobile theft.
 Prison officials said they had not yet located Wilbur Horne, who escaped from the penitentiary annex last Friday. He is serving a three year term for larceny in a dwelling in Clatsop county. Horne was received at the penitentiary June 10 from Clatsop county and was slated to appear before the state parole board next month.

Capitol st. Mrs. Boyd, who came to this country on the Queen Elizabeth in its maiden passenger voyage, will spend six months in this country.

Scouters Find Snow Deep at Camp Pioneer

Members of a work party from Salem found that the snows of the Cascades are rough, according to Martin Mockford, Cascade area assistant scout executive, who returned Sunday night from Camp Pioneer.
 Leaving Saturday morning, the six men and 27 boys reached the camp in the evening making the last seven miles in five hours. Though the weather was good, the snow was deep, Mockford said. The party did manage to get in some work Sunday and now have the lumber stored inside the nearly completed dining hall. The boats and canoes were cached in the boat shelter.
 Among those on the trip were Sam Randle, H. H. Warren, Leslie Morris, Wayne Hadley, Lyle Leighton, and Mockford with 27 senior scouts.

Council Plans Zoning of New City Territory

Salem's city council last night paved the way for zoning recently annexed city territory by adopting as city law an ordinance amending several details of city zoning procedure.
 "Streamlining" of the method of notifying property holders of impending zoning will save the city several thousand dollars in establishing zones in its new area, City Attorney Lawrence Brown told the council in explanation of the bill which had been tabled last month pending further study by the council.
 Although public hearings and remonstrances remain substantially unchanged in connection with zoning, the amending ordinance eliminates the necessity for the city to serve personal notice on all affected property owners which at present requires extensive abstracting to determine property ownership and time and expense in notifying the property owners, Brown said. The bill passed unanimously.
 The council approved several liquor licenses including a service license for Shattuc's Chateau, held up at the last meeting because application had been made on the wrong form. Newly submitted license renewal requests were referred to the license committee.
 Vacated at Imperial drive residents' request was a six-foot alley between Nebraska and D streets. Opening and grading of an alley between 18th and 19th streets was ordered after petition by eight property owners in the 400 block of south 19th street. The city engineer was instructed to prepare plans for improvement of 5th street between Pine and Hickory street.
 Council action set aside parking spaces on Church street at First Methodist church, Cheme-keta street at the W. T. Rigdon mortuary, North Cottage street at the Deaconess Cottage home (two spaces) and South Winter at the Salem Deaconess hospital (four spaces).

WORKER LACK DELAYS VETS HOUSE SURVEY
 A housing survey of Salem veterans and their needs for the department of commerce census bureau is being held up today due to the lack of volunteer workers, according to Wilbert G. Blanchard, district supervisor.
 The survey, which was begun October 29, is needed to determine the need for homes among world war II veterans, Blanchard said Monday. The survey is to be completed within 10 days, but volunteer workers on an hourly wage basis, are needed if the job is to be completed on time, Blanchard stated.
 Declaring that Salem's housing needs are the most critical in the state, Blanchard asked that any persons, particularly veterans, who could assist in the survey contact him at the Salem Chamber of Commerce office.
