Grocers Offer Makings for Old Time Thanksgiving Meal; Remember Sugar

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Women's Editor

Polish up the kitchen stove, get out the recipe books and let's get down to this business of holiday cooking.

Each time I go into the grocer's there's more evidence that we are slowly returning to the old way of gracious living. Sauces are getting back on the shelves, unusual pickles and preserves are again appearing, condiments (though I found no pepper in one store are ever increasing in variety, assorted makings for hors d'oeuvres have returned.

It's the necessities which still stump us. For lack of sugar we'll have to go easy on the cranberry sauce, shortage of fats will inspire budgeting of pies and cakes. But with care, Thanksgiving dinner can be just about pre-war quality, and canned cranberries are at some grocers.

We'll begin at the end and work forward in recipes. Here's a good standard pumpkin pie, not too dark nor too light and with mild, but adequate spicing:

PUMPKIN PIE
1 1/4 cups pumpkin
1 egg slightly beaten
1/2 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon salt
Dust of allspice
1 cup sugar
1 cup milk
Mix, and bake at 450 for first ten minutes, reducing heat to complete cooking. Rub a piece of butter over filling a few minutes before done.
