The town is to have a representative in Oregon-Oregon State

A number of years ago when Ralph Coleman herded his Oregon

State baseball team up and down the countryside he had a hickish-looking lefthander as his No. 1 pitcher, one Glenn Elliott. Other than for discharging his hard one too near the center of the plate once in awhile, and having it belted hard and far, Elliott was classed as a comer. Coleman had much faith in the southpaw from Myrtle Creek even though many others who watched him pitch indexed him as just another lad throwing from the wrong side. Colie had few who be-can flip as well as Glenn in six successive games would be welcomed

Favorites Move Over-'Junior' Back Again

And we'll bet Mr. Coleman buys two copies of this week's issue

We've mentioned defending champion Jack Brande, club titlist

Lee Estey and always prominent Glen Lengren as the warmer favor-ites in the Elks sponsored Mid-Willamette Valley links open. But it seems we've overlooked another to be reckoned with, a gent who has been in retirement the past months. He would be Walt (Junior) Cline, as smooth a stroking par punisher as has been available at Erc Kay's South River road layout in recent years. Walkaway winner in a number of the bigger SGC meets in the past, Cline went into hibernation after dropping the City open finale to Brande last year. But he's back again, has been practicing seriously and most certainly will be among those present when the big Elks meet starts into the stretch. Junior's long layoff apparently did him no great damage, for the other day club pro Jim Russell topped him only by a 2 and 1 count

The oddities in pro baseball are many indeed. For example, the ease of Shortstop Wally Flager. A month ago J. Walter was rated as the best looking shortstop in the Portland Beaver camp." Many thought he would be the Beaver to fill that gap on the varsity. He was a dandy in last season's WIL chase. But then Wally was hurt and was farmed to Salem. He's still three or four weeks away from pulling on his ball togs again, but is holding his outright release. All the while Skipper Jack Wilson is clamoring for a shortstop for the Senators!

good in spring camp. Today's three-hour workout was held under sunny skies and Manager Wilson took full advantage of it. He drilled cut-off plays, double plays and picking Funners off base into the team for a solid hour and ordered a long batting and fielding drill. Although pitching strength has been Wilson's chief concern he gave indication that he is displeased with batting power also. Rookie Ben Gregory, who was expected to be a power with the willow has not been too sharp lately, while Jim Wert also has failed to consistently power the ball. Frank Lucchesi and Lou Kubiak also have failed to display any great power. The team added one more pitcher today with the announcement that Bus Sporer, Roseburg righthander of 22 years, has signed a contract. The 195pounder has impressed Wilson.
