Chemawa Indian School Holds What May Be Last Commencement On Historic Site

Education of Race Main Keynote at Final Exercises

The prospective closing of Che-mawa Indian school is unfortun-ate, but the forcing of Indian students into public schools at least constitutes another step on the road to self-reliance, the school's 1947 and possibly last graduating class was told Monday.

Commencement speaker was George P. LaVatta, district tribal relations officer and graduate of Carlyle, who urged the 14 graduating seniors to return to their families, homes and reservations with the determination to exemplify the value of education to others of their race.

The graduates at their final ceremonies, on the widely-known campus just north of Salem, were in conventional graduation clothes -- dark suits for the boys and pink formals for the four pretty Indian maids.

A large audience of relatives and friends applauded lengthily when Jim Chocktoot of Klamath Falls, class valedictorian, expressed the desire of himself and his classmates to aid their race through education and personal

Willing to Return Here for $3 Raise; Parley Continues

Striking Salem telephone workers Monday night voted their willingness to return to their jobs, probably next Monday, under the contract Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. now offers. The contract would give them a $3 a week pay raise, contrasted with a $4 increase for workers in the Portland metropolitan area. Local union members voted 108 to 3 in favor of the contract "and
