Maybe you can name these 3 old-timers... but can you name three ways that "RPM" would keep them young today?

1. Those bull-frog lights make this one easy to guess. More of these cars might be around today if RPM Motor Oil had been invented sooner. Your modern car is luckier, for "RPM" is compounded to rust-proof engines. Since internal rust causes 80% of engine wear, rust-busting "RPM" makes cars last lots longer.
2. This limousine's long hood hid sixteen cylinders—and all sixteen of 'em took a terrible beating from "creeping" oil. RPM Motor Oil would have kept this M... young because it's compounded to cling to hot spots and guard sizzling upper cylinder walls that "creeping" oils leave bare, exposed to wear.
3. They called this speedster a Bearcat, but carbon caused by old-fashioned oil could make it weak as a kitten. Too bad it didn't have the "RPM" that ends carbon trouble in modern cars. For premium-quality "RPM" contains added compounds that prevent carbon, and all the other motor ills ordinary oil can't stop.
