

Henry Brown Succumbs in River Here

Henry George Brown, 54, who carried identification cards from Portland, Ore., and Watertown, N. Y., died of what First Aid Capt. C. M. Charlton termed "apparently a heart attack" while swimming in the Willamette river near Minto's Island Monday afternoon. Charlton said the man had a large scar on his back. Two Salem boys who were swimming with the man, having rowed to the island with him in a boat, gave the victim artificial respiration, believing he had drowned, until first aid men arrived at the scene. Finding their efforts brought little result, Eddy Logan, who lives in Portland, swam to shore to obtain help and Joe Allen of 746 Mill st., continued with his efforts to revive the man. One of the boys grasped Brown under the arms and swam to shore with him after the attack, Charlton reported, adding that he believed their "excellent" artificial respiration efforts would have saved the man if he were a drowning victim.

Kellogg Sues To Keep Mink, Foxes Healthy

Because fires and smoke give mink and foxes a tendency to kill their young, A. F. Kellogg, route 2, Turner, filed a suit to collect $2000 in Marion county circuit court Monday.

Kellogg brought the suit against Pearl Hawk, who lives on the premises adjoining Kellogg's fur farm. The complaint alleges that the defendant "with deliberate malice" has repeatedly set fires on her own property when the wind was just right so that the smoke would carry into Kellogg's fox and mink pens.

Female foxes and mink, the complaint states, are highly nervous and excitable and when unusually disturbed, such as during exposure to smoke, will destroy their offspring. Kellogg states in the complaint he has 12 female foxes and 33 female mink, and that the young produced by them this year will be worth about $15,000. As a direct cause of the alleged fire-building, the complaint states, the foxes and mink have become highly nervous and that "their nervous systems have become permanently impaired and their health deteriorating." The complaint asks that the defendant be restrained from building fires in such a manner as to cause injury to plaintiff between April 1 and July 10 of each year.

Appeals for Albany Laboratory Voiced

WASHINGTON, May 26 (AP)—More funds for the Albany, Ore., metallurgical project were urged today by Senator Cordon and Representative Ellsworth. Ellsworth attacked the house reduction of funds for a new zirconium pilot plant at Albany to $57,000, declaring that the originally planned $144,000 would have enabled important research.

Denials Filed In Suit for Water Rights

A denial of certain allegations was filed in Marion county circuit court Monday in behalf of the city of Salem, defendant in a water-rights suit brought by Gardner Bennett of Stayton last September.

Bennett's complaint seeks an order enjoining defendants from diverting more than 22 cubic feet per second from the North Santiam river or from diverting any water when it will diminish Bennett's alleged prior right to 812 cubic feet per second.

In filing Monday the city denied those portions of the complaint relating to personnel of the Salem water commission and outlining defendants' alleged actions in diverting the river water. Also denied is the complaint's allegation that the continued diversion of water will injure Bennett's alleged power and water contracts. Any knowledge or information of the plaintiff's prior water rights, which according to the complaint date back to 1866, is also denied.

Dyke Relates Atom Benefits

Benefits to be derived from atomic energy were stressed by Dr. Walter Dyke, professor of physics at Linfield college, at the Salem Chamber of Commerce forum luncheon Monday.

"The atomic age is here to stay, the only question is are we here to stay?" he said. No defense exists or is in sight against the atomic bomb, scientists state, but the development of disease controls resulting from research and investigations may be greater than is now believed, averred the speaker.

Legislature's Journals Cost State $10,050

Compilation of the house and senate journals as official record of the 1947 legislature was completed Monday at a total cost placed by state officials at $10,050. The amount represented pay to legislative officials in the 50 days they worked after close of the session. The house journal cost $6,750 as compared with the senate journal's $3,300 cost.

In closing minutes of the session the house had voted $15 per diem pay, including Saturdays and Sundays, for all nine house journal revision employees — six clerks, Speaker John Hall and Reps. Joe Wilson and Earl Hill. Payments received by the senate journal revision employees were: President of the Senate Marshall E. Cornett, Klamath Falls, and Chief Clerk Zylpha Burns, $15 a day each; the assistant chief clerk and calendar clerk, $10 each, and two stenographers at $8 a day each. Hall, Hill and Wilson had little to do on the journal job, as they have made few appearances here the past 50 days.
