

Oregon's $500,000-a-year holly industry will become a million and a half dollar industry if the three-point program that the Oregon Holly Growers' association set up at its recent meeting in Portland is carried through successfully.

Vern Casebeer, former Silverton resident, but now living at Oak Grove, has been made president of the association, elected at the May meeting.

There are 160 holly growers in Oregon, representing more than 500 mature orchards, shipping 500,000 pounds of holly annually to every state and foreign country.

Point one of the program is to ship only the choicest Oregon holly, properly treated and packed, to arrive at its destination in the best condition.

That it is time to transplant a fuchsia cutting when a gentle pull indicates that the cutting is clinging to sand in which it has been started.

That webworms are active now, and so are caterpillars, and that a coating of lead arsenate or rotenone usually gives effective control.

That aphids can greatly weaken your shrubs or plants and that nicotine sulphate, pyrethrum and rotenone, dusted or sprayed on the insects will control? That these insecticides will also control spider bugs?

June 14-15—Corvallis rose show. June 18-19—State meeting Oregon Federation of Garden clubs, Bend. July 31—Newport Garden club show.

September 12, 13, 14—Oregon Fuchsia society show, Portland. Questions and Answers. V. B. asks when to take fuchsia cuttings.

Ans.: Anytime up to August. They should be started in sand. Ques.: I have received four cuttings of a blue-flowered shrub with requests for identifications.

Ans.: This is ceanothus thrysoflorus, a native of Oregon. It is sometimes referred to as Blue blossom, and sometimes as wild lilac. The shrub grows rather tall and the dainty blue flowers are very attractive.

S. R. asks when and how to take cutting of daphne cneorum.

Ans.: In spring just as the flowers are ready to open. Pinch out the bloom. Or the first week in August. Insert the cutting in sand over which a layer of peat is spread. Cover with glass or cold frame and allow no air for ten days.

C. H. A. asks the name of spray for killing wild evergreen vines.

Ans.: Animate or sodium chlorate. If the latter, use one pound to one gallon of water. Use animate according to directions on can.

M. K. R. asks if it is too late to make cuttings of chrysanthemums.

Ans.: No they may be made up to late July with expectations of blooming.

A. L. reports that she saw a shrub in a garden, of a friend at the coast and this friend called it rock cotoneaster. A. L. can't find it in the garden book she has.

Ans.: Likely cotoneaster horizontalis, which grows very well here.
