New Manbrin Gardens Homes—More to Come

Looking west along Wayne drive in Manbrin Gardens, (top photo houses in all stages of construction can be seen. Those at left and center are completed and occupied, while those farther along are being built. These new homes are part of a 75 house project by the F. I. Bressler Co., Inc. on the North River road near Keizer. House construction is speeded by standardized plumbing layouts and pre-cutting all lumber used in building. At the left in above photo workers are loading a truck with lumber cut on a special fabricating line and at right are some of the plumbing installations assembled in the plumbing shops (Photos by Don Dill Statesman staff photographer)

Pre-cut Lumber, Standardized Plumbing Aids Housing Project

Not many years ago it was a short distance from one boundary to the other of Salem, but today the Cherry City stretches into the farm lands north, south and east. New residential districts now being built beyond the city limits already have petitioned for annexation, indicating that a trip "across town" will really be a long one in the near future.

The old North River road, among other sections, is rapidly becoming another community of homes as thickly settled as Fairmount Hill. Most of the credit for the sprouting of new homes along North River road can be given F. I. Bressler and his Manbrin Gardens project. There, 75 neat, cheerful homes will be completed this winter. Already 30 of the houses have been completed and 25 occupied.

Plans Expanding

Bressler started out to build one or two houses and, with his son, Gordon Bressler and son-in-law, L. A. Rowan, he now has the Manbrin Gardens project well under way, land for an additional 130 homes adjacent to the Gardens, and workers grading streets for a new 93-house project just beyond the city limits near the old county poor farm land.

The city council recently gave Bressler the green light on his latest project for the low cost housing units and went on record to provide city water for the development pending annexation of the area to the city. After the project is completed with water and sewage facilities installed, and upon acceptance of annexation at the October special election, the city of Salem will reimburse Bressler for the utilities, members of the council indicated.

Success of the huge project is based on selecting 13 different basic designs prepared by Bressler architects and designers, and then setting up production lines on which four men can cut the lumber for five houses per day by using special saws and equipment. Plumbing is standardized and all major water and sewage lines are assembled in a plumbing shop. Cabinets and built-ins are built to specifications in a cabinet shop on the project grounds.

All of this preparation speeds actual construction of the buildings as carpenters do little sawing or cutting of materials on the job—they just fit the pieces together and then nail them secure. Even with this "prefabrication" the completion of a house takes about 90 days because Bressler believes in giving plaster, paint and lumber plenty of time to dry out.

All Single Story

The homes are all of single story design and have two or three bedrooms. Variation in the 13 basic designs is achieved by using different types of lumber for the outside, different roofing materials, various styles of brick and natural stone, and changing locations of entrances. These changes give the layman observer the impression that there are 30 to 40 different house designs in the project.

Located as it is out of Salem near Keizer the community has its own water and sewage disposal plants conforming to state requirements. There is nearly a mile of wide, well-paved streets, curbs and sidewalks which gives the project an air of stability. Looking ahead, Bressler has set aside ground for business establishments which in time will be needed to serve the new community. All of which will be ready when Salem and suburban residents elect to make the North River road area a part of the Cherry City.
