A-Power High On Navy's List Of Research

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14 (AP)—The navy said last night "much needed research has been accomplished" on running its ships with atomic energy but the project is still in "preliminary state," under way, the department reported in a statement summing up the two years since V-J day.

The fleet has shrunk from 1,300 combatant ships to 306 in that time but it stands as "the most powerful, highly mobile air-sea fighting force in the world today," the statement said.

Atom Most Important
Atomic energy to power its ships is regarded as perhaps the navy's most important long-range program because of the tremendous change in fleet operations and ship design that such a power plant would bring.

Ships and submarines would no longer be tied to a fueling point and could operate over great distances for long periods. Important advances already listed by the navy include:

Valuable data obtained by navy cameras rocketing 100 miles into the New Mexico skies. German V-2's were used.

New metal alloys being developed to stand the fierce heat of jet engine gas turbines.

Firepower Increased
Automatic eight-inch turret guns for heavy cruisers with four times the previous firepower.

New rockets that are faster, more powerful and more accurate than those the navy used during the war.

Two submarines, scheduled for completion in 1951, that will be the world's fastest (at the end of the war, the Germans were reported to have developed submarines swifter than ours, above and below the surface.)

First Picking of Pears Finished

ZENA — The first picking of Bartlett pears in the Worth Henry four-acre hill orchard was finished Friday, with Kenneth Hunt, Wayne Henry, John Love and Ernest Schlegel as pickers. The second picking will start next week. Henry, who sprays his pears eight times, reports an average yield and fruit of excellent quality.

The trumpet-bird of South America is named from the sound it utters. It rarely flies but runs very fast.

Before World War II Burma was the world's leading rice exporter.
