Gravensteins Best for Sauce to Put Away for Winter Use; Good in Jell

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor

There's really no better canning and jelling apple than those which come from the old gravensteins in the back yard. Pick the fruit green and you'll have wonderful pies, sauce, cobbler, jelly and what have you.

Apples are good canned or frozen for use next winter. Some women like to peel and core their apples before cooking them while others like the stronger flavor of sauce made by cooking skins and cores (if free from worms) and then running the whole thing through a collander.

The sauce may be put into jars either sweetened or unsweetened, and processed for five minutes in a hot water bath if the jars are hot and the sauce is hot. Otherwise it will take longer for the sterilization process.

As freezing the sauce, make it as usual and take to the freezer as soon as possible after making. Some recommend putting winter varieties into the locker uncooked, either in a light brine or light syrup, though I see no advantage to this as winter apples keep well up until spring varieties come into the market.

Skins and cores of the apples may be cooked in a little water and used to make other fruit juices jelly.

APPLE CHUTNEY
6 lbs. sour-green Gravenstein apples
1 quart vinegar
2 lbs. brown or white sugar
2 lbs. Sultana raisins
8 tablespoons finely cut garlic
8 tablespoons white mustard
