Don't Look Now...

but . . . pardon us if this week's yarn is slightly warped, and if certain handicrafts keep looming up in the material, but our head has been spinning, and with the weaving conference going on, and our society editor going off, we've been shuttling back and forth between Lausanne and the Statesman, trying to catch a little of what's going on and at the same time run a woman's department—

Good way out . . . We see by the paper that a 13-year old Compton, Calif. girl, one of the youngest pilots in the United States, runs her own plane. Now here's a suggestion, why don't all those

Up in the air . . . while talking about the sky, did you ever see any prettier cloud formations than Saturday? And us with a packet of color films, and not a camera available that they would fit

She has chosen a white moire wedding gown, fashioned with bertha edged with accordion pleated moire, long fitted sleeves ending in points at the wrist, fitted bodice and full skirt with bustle in back and ending in a court train. Her veil is of fingertip length illusion, held in place by a coronet embellished with seed pearls. She will carry a bridal bouquet of white roses, centered with a creamy Catalaya orchid.
