Coal Strike in Britain

The nationalized coal industry board of Great Britain agreed with the heads of the national coal union to call for increased production from coal miners, since coal is the critical need of the whole country. The working face for each miner red? Being a communist is not was increased from seven yards to seven yards, two feet. For a crime in this country, and a this miners in one mine struck and now 25,000 other miners union office is not a public ofhave struck in sympathy. Coal miners are still working only a five-day week, after the war-time six; but they object to lt is true that communists try the demand for increased production.

This poses the inevitable problem which arises in the social- disorder. But unless we make ist as well as the capitalist state: getting labor to produce. The communism a crime it seems uncapitalist state does it by wages and offer of good working just to bar communists from holdconditions. The socialist state offers the same. But what either can offer depends on how much production is maintained. Un- of combatting communist influless the coal is mined and goods produced and manufactured ence. This type of repression may there is nothing to distribute under either type of economy.

The British miners long pleaded for nationalization. Theirs was a sorry lot, due in large measure to lack of full employment before the war. The mine owners refused to install mod- to a communist form of society. ern mining machinery, and perhaps the unions protested too But in our zeal to combat the reds on the ground that it would cost workers jobs. Now the whole we ought not to disregard ordicountry suffers because of the ancient pick-and-shovel methods still used in British mines. For lack of coal, factories cannot increase output as they would like, homes go poorly heated, communist representation in their exports of coal, once a big factor in British trade, have dwind- organization. We do not need to led; and in consequence the miners themselves are unable to get jittery in fighting communism. obtain the foods they need, the tobacco and other necessities or luxuries of living. Socialism of itself does not solve production problems. The miners do not want to work harder for the Public Records state as a proprietor than they did for the private owner. England may have to provide "incentives" just as Russia has done.

Russia Ratifies Treaties

Radio Moscow reports that Russia has at last ratified the peace treaties with Italy, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria and Finland, all axis-partners with Hitler's Germany. The treaties land, all axis-partners with Hitler's Germany. The treaties were drawn up about a year ago in Paris and were ratified by the other powers months ago. Russia, for unknown reasons, was a holdout. No explanation of the delay was offered, but excuses were given as to why action was deferred. One reason may have been unwillingness of Russia to withdraw troops because the treaties call for such withdrawal within a given term after ratification. Now that Russia dominates all the countries fugitive warrant, preliminary examination continued until September 10.

The treaties are indispensable for the reorganization of normal national existence. Their ratification puts relations on a peace basis and makes possible a speeding up of national recovery.

Hold Terminal Pay Bonds

Tuesday war veterans will be able to cash their terminal leave pay bonds. All they have to do is to take their bond to the bank and endorse it for cashing. The bank will take the bond and pay over the money.

Just as simple as that, And the danger is that the money go "just like that."

Just as simple as that, And the danger is that the money go "just like that."

So, the banks and others who feel a sense of financial responsibility urge veterans not to cash their bonds but to hold them until they mature, some three years hence. Of course if Elizabeth Jane Johnson guardian—them until they mature, some three years hence. Of course if the holder needs the money to use in his business or for building a home or buying a farm or to keep his family alive it's all right for him to cash it. But if he just wagts to blow in the money "he'll be sorry."

The bonds pay 21/2 per cent interest, which beats savings bank interest; and they can be cashed at any time. A little chunk of money laid away like that is a good backlog of investment, available in case of emergency, and growing in size through the accumulation of interest, GI Joe would do well to hold his bond unless he is sure he can invest it to much better advantage.

His bridges have attracted the attention of engineers all over the world for their beauty of design and practical utility.

It was Thomas Carlyle, we believe, who after spending most Reunion at Silverton of his mature years as a writer commented that probably the work of his father, a bridge-builder in Scotland, might last longer than his own. Regardless of comparisons it is true that at a picnic at the Silverton park. a well-built bridge has qualities of permanence. Europeans Present were Mr. and Mrs. S. The bridges Starr, Vincent Starr of Stayton, that McCullough designed have lasting qualities, and we trust for centuries this "McCullough bridge" will stand as a lasting monument to a great engineer.

From Our Contemporaries

NO SALT IN OUR AIR

We have been taken to task by a knowing reader about our Banning and Sandra of Salem, use of the expression "salt air" in a news story about the Astoria and Mr. and Mrs. Walt Hanson policemen's new badges, and how they withstand the allegedly and Linda Kay of Salem.

Our reader declares there is no such thing as salt air, and we must shamefacedly admit he is correct. Air cannot chemically contain salt, and the moisture in the air, being evaporated from the ses and streams, also is chemically pure and without salt, except perhaps for minute and harmless particles.

As to the corrosive effect of our climate upon such things as automobile bodies and policemen's badges, we probably must attribute that to the abundant moisture which is almost always with us throughout the winter months and much of the spring, fall and summer too. Even on sunny days-of which we have a plenteous supply-our atmosphere is humid.

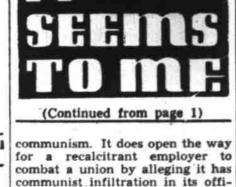

There is a pleasant smell of the sea in our air, particularly when the westerly winds are blowing, but it is not salt, any more than the aroma of coffee and bacon is coffee and bacon. One can't est the smell. Our reader believes that the designation of our atmosphere as salt air is inspired by chambers of commerce of envious inland cities who want to warn potential settlers here that the air in Astoria will corrode their homes and offices and eat away their skins and flesh. This suspicion seems far-fetched. Actually the reputation of salt air as pleasant and beneficial far outweighs its reputation as a corrosive agent and we doubt if many people are kept away from here by fear of fictitious salt in the ozone. Actually, the sir here is no more corrosive to cars and cops' badges than in any community of more than average humidity.-Astorian-Budget.
