Fair's Opening Day Draws Large Crowd of Picnickers; Displays Good

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor

Well, the opening of Oregon's 82nd state fair brought just what the public wants in temperature, a good hot day where everyone can sit around and mop brows, eat melting ice cream and nurse tired feet.

While the crowd was ample, it seemed less condensed than last year and certainly the lineups for food and rest rooms were far smaller. Everyone seemed pretty contented and we heard only a few calls for mothers of lost children over the loud speaker Monday.

The state police's fancy figure-8 traffic plan is unique, giving everyone a chance to allow everyone else to cross the traffic first.

Lovers resting in each other's arms on the lawns amid picnicking families and playing children, seemed to mind neither publicity nor heat.

One family group, sitting on the ground seemed oblivious to the state fair and centered their interest on the ballgame coming over a portable radio which they had brought along.

Though the large displays of farm machinery really beckoned me, I dutifully went to the women's department, where cooked foods and handwork were to be reported upon.

While displays in the food and needlework sections seem small again this year, the quality is good and the arrangement pleas-
