Government News: Here and in Britain

While our senate committee is uncovering some funny business in the stock and bond deals of one of its high-priced army officers in wartime the British chancellor of the exchequer has resigned his post, one of the highest in the cabinet, because he violated a rule as to the inviolability of the budget.

It seems that the budget, including tax matters, is a sacred cow in British eyes. The chancellor comes into the house of commons and there discloses his facts and figures and makes his recommendations. Before that his papers are as secret as the famous dispatch box of the foreign minister. But Hugh Dalton before entering the house to present his emergency interim budget conversed with a newspaper reporter for the London Star and told him what his recommendation would be for new taxes. The paper published the advance news and this created a great stir in political and newspaper circles.

Dalton has been one of the architects of the labor party but he has not been in high favor within the cabinet. When the storm broke over this violation of an ancient rule Dalton felt forced to admit his indiscretion in a speech in the commons. and to back up his apology with a tender of his resignation. which was promptly accepted. No damage was done by the premature publicity but the resulting furore "broke" Hugh

In this country we have few rules of the kind. "Top secret" information seeps out of presumably locked cabinets with remarkable ease. And nobody resigns in consequence. A British member of parliament recently resigned because he was disclosing information about secret sessions to newspapers; but then he had it coming because he blatted that others were selling such news. Here reporters quickly find out what happened in an executive session though they may not publish the reports.

At present a drive is on to put a censorship on official news. Rules are proposed which would put a muzzle on government employes and in effect reduce government news almost to publicity handouts from departments. The ban is extending from state and defense departments to others dealing with domestic civilian affairs. For example the way the story of the new rules got out was when they "leaked" at the veterans administration. which surely is not an agency whose affairs require any hush-

A protest from the American society of newspaper editors brought some modification of the rule, but government employes turity through Christ's giving him are still under some threat of losing jobs for giving out information that might prove embarrassing.

There is reason for withholding of vital information: military secrets, state department plans, budget and tax recommendations, crop reports until such time as its release may be proper. But it is dangerous business to apply censorship to the vast bulk of government news and keep employes under threat of firing for disclosing it. Congress and the administration are becoming too jittery. They should relax and compose themselves Revival Closing Will and let news flow "naturally."

What's Cooking in New Cars

Two years from now the highways will be buzzing with real postwar cars—low-slung, sleek, speedy—and today's sought-st., with J. E. Williams of Pasa-LABISH CENTER COMMUNITY after models will look a good deal like the prewar irons . . . if dena, Calif in charge. Sunday the automobile industry has its way, that is.

The 1948 and 1949 cars will not be streamlined hot-rods; present-day highways need considerable remodelling before cars can race along at 100 m.p.h. with reasonable safety. But the new models definitely will be different: more comfort, more room, easier driving with automatic transmission and (by 1950) uled, a quartet, a trio, a duet, a high compression engines using a third less (but higher octane) gasoline, air conditioning and power steering aids. They will look better: more horizontal lines and smooth curves. And their o'clock service. price tags will show the 5 per cent increase in production cost, too.

These changes are an indication that automobile manufacturers do not expect to ride the crest of the sellers' market much | TRINITY longer, a United States News survey suggests. As production increases and the backlog of orders gets slimmer, competition between manufacturers will be renewed. That means established companies will no longer be able to get by with satisfactory profits from obsolete vehicles, and newcomers like

The Medford Mail-Tribune discovers a bottle-neck in the highway between Medford and Ashland. Bottle-neck is a new and popular disease. It proved infectious in industrial plants during the war and expediters were hired to go round the country to crack bottle-necks. Since the war highways have caught the infection. Oregon City was the first (and worst) bottle-neck in this state. Now most every community complains of symptoms of bottle-neck. Awareness of the disease at Medford-Ashland probably became acute after the Ashland-Medford football game last week, the road not being wide enough for Ashing service, 11 a.m. Junior and senior young people's and prayer for adults, 7 p.m. Evangelistic, 8 p.m.

Personality Development Via Religion, Theme of Forum Talk

Declaring "adult infantilism" to be a principal cause of many social and personal troubles, Dr. Raymond B. Walker of Portland opened again Friday the "Clinic of the Christ" at the Salem Churchmen's forum in the YMCA. He used Simon Peter, one of Christ's Disciples, as a classic example of arrested personality development. Dr. Walker, pastor of Portland's First Congregational church,
