Quality and Price

Consider Quality as Well as Price When Selecting Thanksgiving Turkey

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Woman's Editor

Selecting the Thanksgiving turkey is a serious matter these days, with the price what it is, but with care one can get the very most for her money.

Many women have ordered their turkeys by now, or at least will today, but when the fowl is picked up the buyer should give it a good inspection to see if it is what she ordered.

A reliable meat man will deliver you a turkey with clear skin and few pinfeathers (unless the bird is very large, therefore older than the smaller ones) the liver will be a good clear red, heart will be normal in size, the flesh will be unscarred and unbruised.

When selecting a turkey one should consider the quality as well as price. Usually prices for like quality birds (except in a few cases where the meat man is unusually high or low on all his prices) will be approximately the same at all reliable markets. Occasionally you'll get a good bird for a lower price but some cut-rate turkeys are "seconds."

Occasionally, too, women who know their turkeys can pick out very good birds among the "seconds." The breast may be a little off center or some other minor defect may show up, but the meat will show the necessary attributes to a good turkey.

Many "seconds" however have been placed in that class because the meat is not top quality. It may have been bruised or broken, the bird might have shown up to be unhealthy, it might have been held over out of storage too long.

So the thing to do is to buy from a man you know you can trust, and then look the bird over before taking it home.

By the way, hens are always higher in price than toms. One buys a hen when she wants a smaller bird. Toms must be bought when the turkey is large, the hen is always smaller and if very large is probably too old.

Now about vegetables for Thanksgiving.

One can't be too original with the menu, as most of the meal is traditional, but the hostess can vary the vegetable. There's a wide variety of vegetables available now, either fresh, frozen or canned. The vegetable should be one which will offset some of the richness of the menu. Members of the cabbage family are always welcomed. There are Brussels sprouts, broccoli, cabbage and cauliflower in the markets fresh now.

Some women like to cook on-of Euclid chapter of Jefferson was an honor guest. There were out-others like Harvard beets for their attractive color and spicy refreshing flavor.

If the vegetable is to be canned, sauteed corn and green peppers may suffice.

Greens are available, and are preferred by many housewives for these ample holiday meals. There are spinach, endive, chard and Chinese cabbage.

Whatever the menu is, it should include something crisp, something tart, and something raw. This goes for interest and makes it possible for diners to eat more, with nothing but enjoyable after effects.

At regular meeting of Salem chapter, OES Saturday, the work of Jobs Daughters was exemplified by the Independence Bethel, under the direction of Mrs. Joe Rogers, Bethel guardian and Joe Rogers, associate guardian.

John Terhune, worthy patron of town visitors from Portland, Wheeler, Dallas, Independence, Jefferson and Union, Oregon, and from Butler, Pennsylvania.

A class of six became members by initiation: Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Hughes, Delmar Hansen, O. R. Eckersley, Thomas Wriston, T. W. Leasure, Mrs. M. F. Grub became a member by affiliation.

Mrs. Lenald Kephart, in charge of music for the evening presented Lila Parmentier in vocal solos, with Diane Perry as accompanist.

Mrs. Elmo McMillan and Mrs. Walter P. Kafstens were in charge of decorations. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Miller, Mrs. Ota Wellard and Mrs. Charles Boyer were in charge of the dining room.

Worthy matron, Mrs. William R. Newmyer, and worthy patron, Charles C. Boyer, presided during the meeting.

Hendrickson Hurt in Crash

Wallace M. Hendrickson, Portland, former Salem fireman, was in Salem Memorial hospital today with serious head injuries sustained in an auto accident at South Commercial street and Hansen avenue Sunday morning.

Witnesses said Hendrickson was driving north on Commercial street when he apparently became confused about which direction to turn as he approached the intersection of Hansen avenue. His car struck a safety island, crashed through a rocky in a home on the west side of Commercial street and hit a power pole on the corner of the intersection, completely severing it, police said.

Miss Estella Willard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Willard of Salem, whose engagement to Harold Gilbert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Gilbert of Aumsville, has been revealed. The wedding is planned for next fall. (Jeston-Miller.)

Hendrickson was found behind the wheel, bleeding badly from head cuts and unconscious. He was taken to the hospital by the Salem first aid car, and is under the care of a special nurse. Hospital attendants said he was slightly improved Monday night and had been conscious since Sunday night.

Mrs. Cloud Guest Of Woman's Club

Mrs. Henry Roe Cloud of Pendleton was guest speaker at the Saturday afternoon meeting of the Salem Woman's club. Her address was "The American Indian." Credit was given to our public school system for the development of the Indian. She stated the Indian has been made to be dependent upon the government, but it is now time that the Indian take over his own responsibility.

The musical portion of the program was provided by Miss Barbara Miller, a student at Willamette university, who played two piano compositions.

At the business session which was presided over by Mrs. Guy N. Hickok, vice president, it was voted to contribute money to the school lunch program at the Richmond school. At the next meeting members are requested to bring gifts for the 162 children at the Children's Farm Home at Corvallis.

Bowls of chrysanthemums were arranged around the club rooms and the lace covered tea table was centered with fruits and leaves. Mrs. Ronald Glover and Mrs. C. C. Goer poured during the tea hour. Mrs. J. Edgar Purdy was in charge of the tea and was assisted by Mrs. R. S. Leshner, Mrs. R. W. Masters, Mrs. J. A. Jelders, Mrs. J. C. Pike, and Mrs. John TeSelle.

Delta Zeta alumnae will meet tonight at 8 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Charles F. Feike on Richmond street. Mrs. Ward Davis will assist the hostess. All Delta Zetas are invited to attend.
