Phone Building to Gain Height

The familiar facade of the Salem office building of Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., 740 State st., is being dismantled by workmen preparatory to adding another story to the building, part of a $650,000 remodeling and expansion project here. Shown in the picture is the building surrounded by scaffolding, covered walkways to protect pedestrians from falling materials, and workmen atop the corner with an air hammer cutting away the masonry. Increased telephone patronage in Salem makes necessary more space, which is being secured in the new floor and a four-story addition to the rear. (Photo by Don Dill, Statesman staff photographer.)

Burial will be at Mt. Hope cemetery.

262 Enrolled In School for Job Training

Enrollment at the Oregon vocational school at Klamath Falls marine barracks has now reached 262, as against 35 at the time the institution opened in July of this year. O. I. Paulson, director of the state vocational department, announced Tuesday. Twenty-three courses already have been established with three others contemplated early in January. The new courses include clock and watch repairing, medical technician and dental technician. Courses now range from 780 to 3,300 hours. Paulson said that with the completion of additional apartments for students the enrollment probably would reach 400 by February or March. The goal is 1,500 students.

Toastmaster Opinion Split On Aid Issue

A lively discussion of the Palestine division approved by United Nations and of the house foreign affairs committee's suggestion that China share in this nation's foreign emergency relief program Tuesday found members of the Salem Toastmasters club about equally divided in their opinions on each count. The Toastmasters at their dinner meeting last evening in Nohlgren's restaurant heard talks by Keith Enger, Salem high school speech student appearing in behalf of the Christmas seal sale to support anti-tuberculosis groups, and members Joseph Dodd, Clyde Eversizer, Dr. M. E. Gadwa, Wallace Carlson and Coburn Grabenhorst. Richard Grabenhorst was toastmaster. It was announced that Ralph Nohlgren's humorous talk on "It Could Happen Here," recently presented before Toastmasters, will be given by the club members before Canby Kiwanis club December 9.
