Truman's Plea for Conservation

President Truman used the occasion of the dedication of the Everglades national park in Florida to make a plea for conservation of our scenic resources. He warned against those who would waste our natural patrimony for private gain.

Undoubtedly he was aiming his shots at those interests which are seeking to break down some of our national parks and overgraze the forests and public domain. There are several berta Boyer, Frank Papenfus, threats, all of which have as their purpose exploition for commercial interests. One effort is being made to take a large acreage from the Olympic national park and transfer it to the forest service so it might be logged. A similar attempt is being made at Jackson Hole national park, so land may be Charles Bales. opened for grazing. Stockmen back a bill by Representative Room 206 Repeats Bartlett of Wyoming to force suspension of forest service plans to scale down grazing permits. They also do considerable talking about turning over public domain to the states or selling it to private holders.

Fighting these attempts are conservationists, lovers of wild life, organizations like the Izaak Walton league and the Federation of Western Outdoor clubs. They resist these encroachments. They want the parks preserved and the public lands protected against denudation through overgrazing. They Movie Shown point out how stripping the land of vegitation speeds erosion and causes pollution of streams.

In the case of the Olympic national park, lumber interests want to invade the great "rain forest" of the Bogachiel watershed. Some compromise has been suggested but conservationists think the private interests demand far too much. The Jackson Hole expansion was made by executive order of President Roosevelt, but extension of the park had been worked on by Secretary Wilbur of the interior department under President Hoover. John D. Rockefeller had contributed much money to buy out private owners. It would be a breach of faith now to Frank Papenfus, Marie Marquardt, turn the lands over to graziers.

The warning of President Truman is well-timed. Transfer of Farm Labor Employment

The regular state employment service is preparing to take over the handling of farm labor on January 1. During the war this was detached from the service, at that time operated as federal agency, and made a function of the farm extension service. Separate offices were set up and placements for farm occupations made from them. Congress cut off appropriations to the special farm labor employment service so the work moves back to the old organization.

The creation of the separate service came as a result of sen. Lynn Minifie, Jerry Evenden, farmer pressures. Both farmers and food processors were dis- Norman Behrens, Arnold Baldfarmer pressures. More Power for KOAC

AMNESTY FOR ALL C. 0.'8?

The amnesty board appointed by President Truman a year ago is to make early this month its report reviewing the 16,000 or so cases of men who went to jail on charges of evading or defying the draft. The chairman of the board is Supreme Court Justice Roberts, retired.

Most of the 16,000 were classified as outright draft evaders, although many put into this classification were in actuality conprogram. scientious objectors under the terms of the 1940 conscription act. Last week four supreme court justices differed from their five colleagues who ruled that ordinary members of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect were not entitled to draft exemption on religious grounds.

Men with sincere conscientious scruples against military service were given the right of alternate service, and most C. O.'s accepted this option. Some, however, were "absolutists," refusing to attend civilian work camps or even to register for the draft. In May, 1946, some 2,600 of the 16,000 were still in jail because of evasion or opposition to conscription. Today there are about 800, most of them Jehovah's Witnesses. President Truman, like President Wilson after World War I, has refused to grant a of this program in the county. blanket amnesty or pardon, which would restore full civil rights, to all C. Moreover, it is not surprising that the testimony of such administration witnesses as Mr. Andertemple. son and Mr. Snyder has lacked a certain ardor. It has frequently been difficult to guess whether they were testifying for the Truman program or against it. Secretary Anderson showed a marked lack of enthusiasm for one of the most important points in the program, that calling for a reduction in the feeding of grain to animals above a certain weight. He also at one point took occasion to imply that the real trouble was that the state department was stubbornly insisting on sending too much grain to Europe.

Again, Secretary Snyder briskly spoke out against Truman's point one, that calling for controls on bank credit, while within a few hours another administration witness, Federal Reserve Board Chairgently that point one was the heart of the whole plan. Obviously, Sen-
