

Salem Man Weds in Tacoma

Don't Look Now...

but... It's nice to see Salem folk waking up to the fact that slowly our traditions and relics of early days are being changed by a population of new and progressive citizens. Those residents of Garden road are a good example, for they have caused the council to renig on the change of name of Garden Road to Market street. We can surely have a progressive city without taking all the personality from it. A city is much like a person, the new rich must put on airs, while he who has generations of wealth and culture behind him often doesn't find it necessary to try to prove his superiority by superficial display.

And furthermore... watch 'em folks, some day we'll wake up with Bush park instead of Bush's Pasture, just as we did with Willson park instead of Willson avenue.

Good for cheap... Willamette's dramatic department has been giving some very worthwhile productions in the past few years, patronized by entirely too few townspeople. For less than the price of a movie, one can this week see Berkeley Square, an old and popular play at the high school auditorium. Of course the players are non-professional and if you are too intellectual and highly versed in the best drama you may find it boring, but even you may be surprised how un-amateur the young actors are.

Artistic temperament... we heard by the grapevine about the wife of a well known Salem merchant who, when her husband's car finally arrived wouldn't let him take it because the color "didn't go with her spring outfit."

Eureka!... What the world needs, they have said for many years, is a good 5c cigar. Well, we saw some of what looked like a good 5c cigar... for 9c.
