Fascinating Hobby

Filipino Cooking Only One of Many Foreign Countries Offering Recipes

I've long wanted to know more about Filipino cooking, for the little bit of knowledge learned from our University of Washington houseboy, Juan PePalapalot, away back long before the war, whetted our appetites for his native dishes.

Juan laid no claim to being a good cook, for he was of the merchant class, but his inherent taste for good food helped along when he whipped up some special dishes for us from memory. One of his specialties was chicken adobo which I always recall with relish.

Recently, material sent from the news bureau in Manila, busy informing the American public with life in the Philippines, confirmed my suspicions about the cooking native to the islands. It has a certain tang of the islands, but is not so distinctly different from ours as is other oriental cooking.

For instance here is one of their favorites, according to the news bureau material:

BEEFSTEAK A LA FILIPINO

(Serves six.)

- 2 pounds round steak
- Soya sauce
- Lemon juice
- 2 medium-sized onions

Cut the steak in thin slices across the grain. Marinate in a mixture of soya sauce and lemon juice (about 1/4 lemon juice and 1/2 soya sauce) for several hours before cooking time. Vinegar may be substituted for lemon juice if desired.

Drain the meat, and fry it in a hot skillet with a little fat until brown. The meat is then taken from the pan and kept warm. Add 1/2 cup of water to the pan, and allow it to come to a boil.

Then add the soya sauce and lemon juice in which the meat
