

Bush Home Survivor of Victorian Period

The handsome front hallway pictured here with its long graceful staircase is one of the attractive spots in the Bush family home built atop the hill on Mission street. The home (top photo), vacated since the death of Sally Bush last year, soon will be occupied by A. N. Bush whose home property at Capitol and Chemeketa streets has been taken over by the state. The house pictured here will eventually become an art museum to be managed by the Salem Art association. It will be preserved, with most of the original furnishings. The hall and many other rooms in the house are papered in the original wall covering of gold brocade paper, the woodwork is of natural dark finish and the clock at the top of the stairs is 150 years old. Also pictured is one of the guest bedrooms done in Victorian furnishings of wicker, typical of the 1880s. It is the "green room." The Bush home is almost the last remaining residence built during this period of Salem's early life. It was designed by William Boothby, who was also the architect for other fine old homes and for the original building of the state hospital and the Marion county courthouse. Some unneeded furnishings of the Bush home are being sold this week by the art association. (Pictures on page 1)

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Ben's Bride Gets Chickenhearted

Ben Ryder was mighty proud of his young bride when she offered to care for his new flock of baby chicks. "Just like a mother with her brood," he boasts.

Then came market time for fryers—and the crisis! Sue simply wouldn't let Ben near her chickens with an axe. She'd named them as babes... she'd raised them... they were her very own!

Ben poured himself a glass of beer, to think things over sensibly. He hated to lose the price on fryers... but he figured Sue had put up with his peculiarities, he guessed he could put up with her fondness for the chickens.

So now Ben has the nicest brood of laying hens in town, and from where I sit, one of the most successful marriages, too. All because he "lived-and-let-live"—literally. And whenever he wants fried chicken, he takes his bride over to Andy's Garden Tavern for a crisp wing and a glass of beer.
