Banana Business

Old Favorite Fruit in Markets Again Are Popular as Meat Accompaniment

By Maxine Buren
Statesman Women's Editor

The familiar song, "Yes, We Have No Bananas," seems completely out of date these days as that delicious fruit, so much missed during the war, seems almost as a regular item at the grocer's.

Those years when we didn't have bananas were spent by some housewives in figuring out ways to use them if they had them, which they didn't, if you see what we mean.

The fruit is used for much more than mere eating out of hand in countries where it's grown extensively. There are the cooking and eating varieties there. We must content ourselves with the eating varieties, when cooking or eating them raw. Here, then, are some suggestions for making bananas take a real place in the menu.

Four ripe bananas will make a flavorful dessert when made into

BANANA FLUFF
1 cup heavy cream
4 mashed bananas
4 tablespoons sugar
Salt

1 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
Beat cream stiff, combine all, folding in the cream last. Serve in sherbet glasses. Enough for four servings.

Many women learned during the war that home ripening of the fruit is very practical. One can buy it rather green, let ripen at room temperature and have bananas just at the right ripeness for the use they are to be put to. If to be used for broiling they should be a little under-ripe.

Broiled bananas are good with meat, either oven or pan broiled. They go especially well with pork served as sausage cakes, chops, roast or link sausage.

The combination of apricots and bananas is especially good. Some women like to make apricot chiffon pies, either using canned apricots or dried ones, and top them with whipped cream and bananas, or put the banana slices under a meringue.

Bananas make a good company breakfast dish when wrapped with bacon, held with a toothpick and browned until bacon is done in a hot oven.

If bananas are allowed to stand in lemon juice, flavored rather highly with black pepper and then dipped in cracker meal or flour and fried in deep fat, they make an attractive meat accompaniment or breakfast dish.
