Big Time Small Town Stuff

Wait till Henry Wallace hears this—he'll love it. Little dictators are common enough everywhere, but one seldom hears much about them. Well, there seems to be one down in Redding, California, and the whole state is hearing about him, largely through the efforts of the editor of the Redding Record-Searchlight.

The newspaper editor and the chairman of the Shasta county citizens' power-allocation committee have carried on a long-standing feud. It erupted under the heat of the power shortage. The committee barred reporters from their meetings because, they said, the editor doesn't "print the news right." They say he's a communist because he believes in public ownership. The committee chairman, a wealthy real estate man, said, "I'm a private-enterprise man myself," but denied he was investigating a movement against freedom of the press.

The editor believes reporters should have access to committee meetings because that group "exercises the power of life and death over county enterprises." His writers have been barred, evidently, because the paper showed how the committee had misused their wide powers. He pointed out that the chairman has even opposed establishment of free county libraries on the grounds that such libraries would circulate communist literature. Now all this sounds like small town squabbling—the kind that goes on in front of Main Street hardware stores and in the post offices and banks everywhere. No small town is without someone who wants to cut the cheese.

But the fight for press freedom and against petty bullying in Redding, California, is bigger than Redding or Shasta county. It illustrates all too clearly the kind of anti-communist hysteria that is sweeping this country, and endangering—not communism—but the very democratic freedoms which it purports to defend from communism.

The Merry Month

May Day used to be almost as important as Christmas, when you made crayon-colored cards, or Halloween, when you made butcher paper funny-faces. The teacher would get old wallpaper sample books and scraps of tinfoil and remnants of ribbons, then draw a pattern on the blackboard and pass out the scissors and the pastepots.

It was always a shock to find that the odd pattern did fold into a basket. Pasting was much more fun than finding nouns in the grammar book. And if you didn't get all your arithmetic problems right, well, it was because you were busy thinking up poems to write with the baskets. Rime was more important than meaning, of course, and couplets were the best—like

Today it's May
Hoorah, hoorah

If you just couldn't make one up, you could copy lines that sounded pretty. There were verses about Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying, and the merry month of, and April showers bringing flowers. The class wit always came up with something fitting—like

If you would the doctor pay
Leave your flannels off in May

Soon the baskets were finished, still sticky with school paste that smelled like peppermint but tasted awful, and a little lopsided despite all the tongue-biting efforts to make them straight. On the way home from school, if the baskets survived fence-climbing expeditions, you'd crumple a few violets or a neighbor's daffodil into the wallpaper container, and then present the grimy product of a full day's work "to Mother, I love you, Susie," in crooked block letters.

And mother always seemed so SURPRISED and PLEASED—even though you made May baskets every year until the fifth grade. After that, of course, you were much too grown up and had to get concerned about commonplace things, like arithmetic.

You Can't Win

The Ladies Home Journal, one of the outstanding magazines in the women and homemaking field, has pioneered by bringing to its readers such "brain food" as editorials by Dorothy Thompson, a question-answer page by Eleanor Roosevelt, informative articles on the presidential campaign, and, recently, the John Steinbeck-Robert Capa treatise on Russia (also published by The Statesman).

Now they get a letter from a woman in Texas who says the above matter belongs in news magazines, that women want fiction-fashion-food chatter. "Why can't we have things women like in our magazine and leave the other things for the men?" she demands.

Sighs the Journal (which "never underestimates the power of a woman"), "Are women people?"

Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist church deplores the "holy war" on the communists. It sometimes serves as a screen he says for those who seek to retain their power, property or prestige. The commies serve as a common denominator of opprobrium. It's always open season on the Reds. In former years the "infidel Turk" was the scapegoat, and the prayerbook invoked divine punishment on the rascal. Now of course the Turk is out of the prayerbook and on Uncle Sam's Christmas list.

Delivery was made at Salem of two alligators for the Delake aquarium. The animals sell by the foot (but not by the leg). Alligators are subjects of folk tales in the south but no one wants them as house pets.

"We three kings of Orient are"—Abdullah, king of Trans-Jordan, Farouk, king of Egypt, and Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia. The gifts they bring to Jerusalem are not what the Jews want.

A Washington report says both the old political parties are in the red. That isn't as bad as if the Reds were in the parties.

Henry Wallace refers to his party as "the new party." Its leaders are slow picking a name for the baby.

Salem College, Academy Holds May Festivities

Bright skies Friday afternoon permitted observance of May day by Salem College and Academy students with a first annual spring festival climaxed with the crowning of Shirley Bosell, senior, as queen. Miss Bosell is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hjalmar E. Bosell of 1795 S. High st. Queen Shirley was crowned by Master of Ceremonies Gordon Geil, senior, 4185 N. River rd. In the court were Princesses Carol Schmidt, senior, route 7, box 483; Muriel Stewart, senior, 1032 Oak st.; Beth Hamilton, junior, 823 Highland st.; Betty Kanuth, junior, route 9, box 99; Estelle Schroeder, sophomore, route 4, box 412, and Betty Brown, freshman, route 4, box 128. Class and faculty skits along with orchestral and choral music under the direction of Ronnie Lush, director of the musical department, provided entertainment. Pages to Queen Shirley were Gay Lee Keppinger, 4, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Keppinger, 2435 Lancaster dr., and Sherrill Millican, 4, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Millican, route 4, box 235.

Mobile Phone System Given Preview Test

The new mobile telephone system designed to cover highways 99E and 99W from Portland to Cottage Grove was given a preview test by representatives of the Salem press Friday.

The Statesman representative, accompanying Elmer Berglund, manager of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company, conversed with his office from the P. T. & T. car while it was traveling between Salem and the transmitter point seven miles southwest.

The service is to be inaugurated throughout the valley Monday. Stations are located at Portland, Salem and Eugene. A call from a telephone-equipped vehicle is picked up via radio by the nearest of the three telephone offices, then relayed via wire to whatever point is desired. In turn, anyone wishing to telephone a properly-equipped vehicle merely calls or dials operator and gives the car's call number (on Friday's case it was 205-2268. A bell and light in the driver's compartment signals that the car is being called.

Friday's demonstrations were conducted with the assistance of Stanley Bacon and R. B. Brockway, sales supervisor and service engineer, respectively, of the mobile system. P. T. & T. officials said it was contemplated the system would extend the entire length of the west coast. It now is in use in southern California.

Students Tour Battery Plant

Two score students of Oregon State's graduating class of electrical engineers, led by Dean F. O. McMillan, were guests this week at a half-day tour of the National Battery company plant in West Salem.

They were shown through the plant by J. T. Lover, manager, and E. H. Barkus, sales and service representative. Lover said the OSC tour was planned as an annual event.

The National Battery company provided the batteries in the new OSC engineering laboratory.

Nazarenes Elect Delegates for District Meeting

Election of church officers and delegates to next week's Oregon Pacific district assembly in Portland highlighted the recent annual meeting of First Church of the Nazarene.

Delegates will be Mrs. O. W. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald J. Lush, Mrs. Paul Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Six, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Edwards and Mrs. John Friesen. District superintendent is Dr. Weaver W. Hess, former pastor of the Salem church.

The new board of trustees includes A. G. Schroeder, C. C. Edwards, Willard R. Friesen, Paul E. Knapp and H. P. Lenton. The board of stewards comprises Mildred M. Stull, Paul Robbins, Eldon Newberry, Harvey D. Gilbertson, Thea Sampson, Wasson McClain, William Ponstorf, Dr. Harold E. Poole and Ray Coursey.

If we are to construct well-rounded, spiritual lives, it must be accomplished through devout prayer and worship.
