But once again, I'll chance it; club. Starting today, May 9, will be Lilac week (which, by the way, was originally set to open May 2). And here in the northwest Lilac week means a pilgrimage to Woodland, Wash., to view the lilacs of Mrs. Hulda Klager. This year, the Favorite wild flower. event honors not only the fragrant, colorful blooms in the gardens of Mrs. Klager but the 83rd birthday anniversary of the lady endron

Beginning with a simple Lilac day, when the Woodland public meeting. was invited to see the Klager gardens, the event has grown at the insistence of enthusiastic visitors to a full-scale celebration sponsored by the Young Men's club of Woodland and with visitors coming from the entire northwest. The gardens, which include over 200 varieties of lilacs hybridized poe Bay. by Mrs. Klager, are also a wonderland of all flower shrubs -magnolia, camellia, rhododendron doors. and peonies as well as the smaller blooms, including primroses.

Mrs. Klager has been hybridizing trees and plants for over 40 years, being inspired by an early reading of a book on the work of Luther Burbank.

Lilacs from Mrs. Klager's gardens have traveled to homes all over the nation and to Canada, in addition to several foreign countries. They are planted in the Arnold Arboretum in Boston, and over 40 plants bloom each year on the grounds of Washington state's capital in Olympia. Most of tically all the new growth disthe varieties are named for eased. friends, relatives or neighboring

I shall never forget my first visit to the Klager gardens. It happened to be shortly after noon tender lilacs. and the housekeeper who met me at the door informed me that Mrs. Klager was lying down resting and could not see me at that time. But Mrs. Klager thought otherwise, and called out, "You come in here. Anyone who wants to see News Word in Sports my lilacs, I want to see. I am never that tired."

So out into the gardens we went, the day was perfect and so were the lilacs, and so, definitely, was also Mrs. Klager, whose sense of humor carried her over the painstaking years of work before new strains were finally developed. Sometimes they were not worth keeping, she admitted. But when there proved some that were new and worthwhile-"Well." said Mrs. Klager, as she spread out her hands, palms up, in an expression that told all it meant to her. If you have never visited the

Right to Limit Cattle Testing

Without the necessary petitions, Marion county court cannot create an exception to its recent order extending the county's Bang's disease testing program to include beef as well as dairy cattle.

The court last week declared it Mrs. Hendricks would extend the testing to include an additional 7,000 to 8,000 beef cattle. Dairy cattle in this county are already included in a. testing program.

To its general order of including beef cattle, however, the court the capitol at a program Wednesarbitrarily exempted a remove region of the Abiqua basin. At a recent meeting of cattlemen, a beef owner in that area protested that testing his herds would prove an enormous task.

M. D. Knickerbocker, chief of the division of animal industry of the state department of agriculture, informed the court Saturday that it could not make an exception of a certain area within the county unless a majority of the county cattle owners petitioned

"I doubt," said Knickerbocker, "if it would be possible for anyone to accomplish the task in this

Knickerbocker also indicated that the court could accomplish the same goal by referring to that clause of the testing law which exempts beef cattle on range or which cannot be gathered for testing except at unreasonable ex-

Dicoumarin

Wondering why it was that farm animals died of hemorrhage after eating spoiled sweet clover led Prof. Link, of the University of Wisconsin, to begin experiments which produced Dicoumarin, a drug that prevents harmful clotting of blood within the blood vessels. Thus the creative curiosity of a scientist gave another life-saving substance to the human race.
