State Farmers Use Research, Rotary Told

Oregon farmers have used data made available by experts to establish well paying and highly marketable crops, it was asserted by J. W. Scheel, assistant to agricultural extension director at Oregon State college, speaking at Salem Rotary club Wednesday in the Marion hotel.

Scheel came to Oregon from Kansas State college as information specialist in the Oregon State college extension service in the fall of 1946. He became assistant to the director when W. L. Teutsch went to Washington, D. C. last fall.

He spoke Wednesday on "A Newcomer's Impression of Agricultural Conditions in Oregon" stating agriculture here is remarkable for its diversity, and its concentrated efficiency in producing quality products on a big scale.

As an example of planning by the farmers, based upon data furnished by experts, Scheel cited the change from large acreage of alfalfa in Klamath county in 1924 to the present heavy concentration on potatoes grown especially for the California markets. Other examples of changes included the increased growing of seed crops for the southern cover crop market.

Production of the average Oregon cow has been increased from 212 pounds of butterfat in 1924 to an average of 266 pounds in 1947, while the United States average is now only 192 pounds, Scheel said. The average Oregon hen laid 149 eggs in 1947 as compared to 119 in 1924, while the national average is yet only 127.
