OREGON PORTS
linked to the world
in growing trade

Ships of all nations, forging along the coast, gliding in and out of our port channels, are bringing a golden harvest to Oregon ports and industries. Last year the port of Portland alone handled the second largest tonnage on the Pacific Coast, more than 7,800,000 short tons of cargo. Apples or autos, lumber or aluminum, great and precious quantities of goods are exported to 73 nations from Oregon docks and the rate of import is increasing. This means that long-shoremen, dock workers, other waterfront employees, railroad men, truck drivers, aluminum manufacturers, lumbermen, fruit men, canners, makers of finished products and many others—all Oregonians—are gaining in wealth.

AS THIS REGION GROWS, SO GROWS PGE

PGE believes Oregon ports will continue to develop, insuring their place among the busiest shipping facilities in the nation and holding their prominence on the West Coast. PGE is investing in that future; spending more than $7,000,000 this year to expand facilities. These dollars will mean extension of superior electric service, brought to Oregonians at the lowest possible cost. These dollars also will help Oregon to grow, the sooner to reach its potential future.
