Nectarines Found to Be Among Best In Flavor of Little Known Fruits

By Maxine Buren
Woman's Editor, The Statesman

My special fruit and vegetable consultant is worried about housewives not knowing more of the virtues of the nectarine. This fruit which looks like a peach, acts like a plum and tastes like a nectarine, may be either eaten out of hand or canned. The fruit isn't new, but has never been overly popular because it's not been publicized. He tells me there's quite a loss each year in the store because people do not know about them and sale is slow.

I took some home, stewed up a few to see how they tasted cooked and found them very pleasing. More like a plum in flavor than a peach. I'd know about their flavor raw before, as they are not a new introduction.

They would be canned with medium syrup and treated like plums, processed 10 minutes hot pack or 20 minutes cold pack. Drop into boiling syrup (one part sugar to one part water is average). Remove pan from stove after two minutes, let stand 20 to 30 minutes, pack in hot jars, cover with syrup and process 10 minutes. Any extra syrup may be used for beverages.

According to the price per basket, nectarines should be lower per pound than any of the fruits right now, that is if the grocer stocks that many.

Any of the many kinds of plum which are available now make for variety in the canning cupboard. Some of the red plums, like Satsuma, and egg plums are grand in flavor and make attractive looking sauce. They're good for eating raw, too.

Just to bolster up the memory of my readers, let me repeat time for canning apricots. Recommendations are for hot pack, simmered 4 to 8 minutes or so in medium syrup and then putting in jars and processing in hot water bath for 15 minutes.

A good recipe for apricot marmalade which uses the hard-to-get pineapple is:

APRICOT-PINEAPPLE MARMALADE
5 pounds apricots
1 medium can pineapple
1 cup nuts
10 cups sugar
Seed but do not peel apricots, arrange fruit and sugar in kettle
