Washington, D.C. Observances To Honor Oregon Centennial

Two commemorations of Oregon's territorial centennial are to be observed in the national capital in the near future, two news releases from Washington, D.C., announced Wednesday.

Next Sunday Oregon will be honored at Washington cathedral with prayers for the government and people of the state and for the men and women of Oregon who have served the nation in time of war, a release from the cathedral announced.

On the Oregon Sunday, the state flag is to be borne in procession with the national colors. Oregonians living in the District of Columbia will be especially invited.

On Saturday, September 11, the library of congress will formally open an exhibition to commemorate the centennial. Luther H. Evans, the librarian of congress, announces. The exhibit will include rare books, manuscripts, maps, prints, photographs, newspapers, and music from the collections of the library, together with items from other federal agencies in Washington, and from governmental agencies and private civic institutions in Oregon.

The library exhibit will be described in a catalog to be published in time for the opening of the exhibit and will contain the text of an address on the history of the state, as well as a complete catalog of the exhibition, and illustrations of 18 of the 341 items.

The exhibit-of-the-week will be a fine colored lithograph entitled "The American Village," showing Oregon City as it appeared in the 1840's, just before it became the capital of the newly created territory.
