Watch Supply of Peaches for Best Day to Can; Methods, Syrups, Given

By Maxine Bures
Statesman Woman's Editor

Members of my fresh fruit and vegetable information bureau report a rather small, but a good quality crop of peaches this year. Furthermore they inform me that the season is to be short and some may miss out.

Crawfords and other early peaches are all but gone, slappies are on their way out, and improved Elbertas, which many of us prefer to can, will be at their best in ten days or two weeks.

Best idea is to contact your orchardist or dealer and make arrangements for delivery when at their best.

Peaches can be frozen or canned—most women find the hot water bath best for canning them. Hot pack method (is preferred by many real experts.) Drop a few peeled and halved peaches into hot syrup made from one part water to one of sugar or sweeter and simmer a few minutes until heated through. Then pack into jars, fill jars with syrup and process 10 to 20 minutes in hot water bath according to ripeness of fruit.

Cold packed, the peaches should be processed for 35 minutes in hot water bath.

The hot pack method is preferred by many because it combines the old open kettle method, which produced lovely flavor, with the simpler way of hot water processing, which makes pre-sterilizing of jars unnecessary.

In freezing your fruit, peel the peaches and drop the sliced fruit into slightly salted water to keep from discoloring.

A mild acid should be added to the syrup or peaches if to be frozen to keep them from darkening.

There are two methods. One may use powdered ascorbic acid or citric acid, both may be bought at the druggist's.

Make a syrup of proportions of 4 cups sugar to 4 cups water. To each quart of the syrup, which is supposed to be enough for 12 packages, add 1 teaspoon ascorbic acid.

If citric acid is used, ¼ teaspoon should be added to 1 quart of water and used as a dip. Drop peaches into the acid water for 1 minute as peeled, then package, covering with the syrup.

Miss Frances Mallette of San Francisco has arrived in the capital for a several weeks visit with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Smith, and with her nephew and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Smith.

OREGON GROWING

COMMERCIAL · INDUSTRIAL BUILDING INCREASES

Convincing evidence of any area's growth is the extent of its commercial and industrial building. Here in Oregon commercial-industrial building soared to a dollar value of $38,385,270 last year, and the number of construction permits already issued this year indicates a continuing healthy growth.

Modern structures emerging from scaffoldings are but visual evidence of the number of businesses and industries converging on Oregon. They are concerns drawn here by prospect of good labor relations, low-cost power, increasingly better transportation facilities, labor pools and other aspects which spell prosperity for business and industry. This influx of suppliers and producers is a wonderful and potent part of Oregon's new-found future.

AS THIS REGION GROWS SO GROWS PGE . . . As the state's industries and commerce expand, PGE is keeping pace, extending and improving its own facilities at a rapid rate. PGE has spent a total of $10,700,000 in expansion of its system during 1946 and 1947 to meet the needs of both residential and business customers. This year it is investing another $7,000,000 to provide more low-cost, convenient power to more customers.
