Some day someone will rap out quite a feature story, and it will be an A-1 dandy. For it will be on Oregonian Sports Editor L. H. Gregory, dean of the Northwest's sportswriters whose oft seriouslyauthored eccentricities at times lean to the pricesless side. The graying Greg-no one seems to know how old he is or how long he's been spreading his athletic gospel to thousands through his sheet, but legend has it he attended the U of Oregon 'way back when-is the biggest asset The Oregonian has. But you wouldn't think so to see him suffling about, his pockets bulging with an assortment of favorite pens, pencils, old and new magazines and record books, silver dollars, stomach pills and latest editions. Or is it off the ordinary to see him bare-headed, his thining pompodour standing straight up as if it had never been introduced to a comb.

The famed old character's life GREG IN ACTION is anchored by baseball, and we among hundreds of others believe he would die in a minute should anyone take the Beavers from Portland. At one time Greg must have been somewhat of a pitcher, for to this day he still challenges the mound to hurl for his Oregonian Orioles. The heart and mind is willing, but the arm ain't, would be one way of describing his blooperball hurling. But he's as serious as Joe DiMaggio in a crucial world series game whenever he's in his playing togs. It can be no other DONOR TRIUMPHS way with the guy, who will also hurl verbal fire at you if you call

Serious about his pitching? We thought he would take a bite out ed the example set by his sire, of Umpire Don Hendrie when he called a close one against Greg the Challedon, nine years ago with an Narragansett special

The Waters orchard will be one of Greg's favorite yards from here in after that

Tales by the Dozens

There are hundreds of yarns flitting around on the guy, who nonetheless commands the respect of a czar, and each one carries a bigger charge than the other. For instance, there was the time here in the valley, after a ball game, when someone suggested they go someplace to eat. Greg knew just the place, where the very best could be had, so off went the party in his car. It wasn't until they had reached a distant Columbia river village that all hands were convinced Greg was en route to Pendleton to one of his pet restaurants! And he was in no way, shape or form kidding. He was in all seriousness going to Pendleton to eat. Also, it's nothing for him to hop out of bed and head for a Chinese restaurant for breakfast, where he will consume three or four bucks worth of chow mein. fried rice, sweet 'n sour, etc., for his morning meal. He's pulled that one while on the road with the Beavers in the spring. He's strictly a silver dollar man all the way, for he doesn't believe in carrying the paper bucks around. His method of addressing the press box on the topic of base hits, errors and earned runs in the Beaver park, where he's official scorer, has the whole PCL grinning. He bangs on a telegrapher's key, hooked up to a buzzer in both the radio and press box, and can play a merry tune with the numerous combinations he's rigged up for the hits, errors, etc. Yards and yards of copy could be dashed out on Greg and his whims, including of course his devout dislike for basketball referees with tooting whistles. And some day someone will do himself a favor by writing the guy up. Goodness knows he writes 'em up in his column, and there are more than a few who consider getting their name in it comparable to a raise in pay.

Camilli Sets Precedent

Dolph Camilli, in town with his Spokane Indians, is not only making his debut here as a WIL skipper, but also establishes another precedent. Dolph is the first manager in the league who was once the most valuable player in a ma-jor lop. He was that in the National circuit one season while first-basing for Brooklyn. He could also qualify as the top father among baseball managers, for his family includes five boys (all of em coming ballplayers) and two girls. A native of Laytonville, Cal., Camilli played five years under Buddy Ryan at Sacramento, after the San Francisco Seals had given up on him as a player. The Sacs sold Dolph to the Cubs in 1933 for $25,000, and the next season the Cubs swapped him to the Phillies. Four years later he was sold to Brooklyn for $60,000 and remained with the Dodgers six years. Managing is nothing new for Cam-illi, as he skippered the Oaklands in the PCL a couple of seasons. When his old pal Ryan became ill this summer, Camilli came to the rescue at Spokane. Since then the Spokes have been playing much better than .600 per cent base-

His pitching shoulder still "giving me plenty of trouble," Sa-lem's Bill Bevens arrived at his Manbrin Gardens home yesterday after driving across-country from New York. Down to a trim 208 pounds and wearing a coveted world series victory ring, which he helped earn for the New York Yankees last fall, Bevens will do no more pitching this year. He intends giving a complete rest to the shoulder that cost him any action at all in the majors this season. Bill has been suspended by the Yankees for his injury, but hopes to return to action next year. In the meantime he will cor-respond with Baseball Commissioner Happy Chandler "to see where I stand with the club."

Yankees Move Into 2nd Slot

Dyers Tip Giants Twice; A's Triumph

The Boston Red Sox, sparked by Vern Stephens four-for-four hit-ting, jumped their American league lead to 11/2 games Saturday by virtue of a 6-2 win over the Chicago White Sox while the Cleveland Indians were losing to the New York Yankees and yielding second place to the Gotham club. Ellis Kinder went the route for the Bosox, letting the hapless White Sox down with seven blows. The Yankees, despites being outhit 12 to 6, subdued the Indians, 3-2 with the aid of a couple of gift runs in the ninth. The win put the Yanks one-half game above the Tribe. Philadelphia's Athletics, once again getting in the victory habit, chalked up their fourth successive triumph with a 5-4 decision over the St. Louis Browns in 10 innings. Lou Brissie went all the way for the A's yielding nine blows. The result left the Macks in fourth place, one game back of Cleveland. Detroit reached the .500 mark in the standings with a 7-5 nod over Washington

In the National loop the runner-up St. Louis Cardinals pulled with-in 1½ games of the Boston Braves by socking the New York Giants twice, 5-4 in 12 innings, and 7-6 while the Bostons were winning a single game from the Chicago Cubs, 5-4. Nippy Jones stole home in the 12th to give the Cards their sial's 33d homer was the clincher in the nightcap. The third-place Brooklyn Dodgers tipped Cincin-nati, 2-0, behind Preacher Roe's three-hit hurling, and the Philadelphia Phils surprised the Pittsburgh Pirates twice, 9-2 and 11-7. The Phils rapped out eight homers in the pair but lost prize rookie Richie Asburn for the season as he suffered a broken hand.
