'Learn to Earn' Students Stick To Studies at State Vocational School Despite Work Requests

(Editor's note: This is first in a series of Statesman articles summarizing the training offered at Oregon Vocational school, newest state educational institution which is just starting its second year.)
By Winslow H. Taylor
Staff Writer, The Statesman

Students at Oregon Vocational school, Klamath Falls, have passed up immediate jobs in order to pursue their training to the very end. Whole classes of others have jobs waiting them as soon as they finish studies at the state school.

These are two of the high recommendations for the state's year-old institution whose slogan is "Learn to Earn."

The students aren't the only ones who like the "job college," for the vocational education division of the state board of education is highly pleased with the school's progress in the months since it was started, almost from scratch. And adds O. I. Paulson, state director of vocational education, the labor unions are generally well pleased with the organization and its results.

The campus, a World War II marine barracks, was acquired by the state as surplus property. The 1947 legislative session voted $620,000 for remodeling and equipment.

An influx of new and returning trainees is expected this month, although OVS is operated on a year-around schedule, with no terms or semesters. While each course has a maximum length for the individual student, he may enter at any time and progress as fast as he is able.

Right now, some 400 students are enrolled. A summer "freeze" of 515 was placed on the student body, but this is expected to be removed soon. Then, based on present equipment and classroom space, the capacity will be about 700, according to Paulson. Whether this number can actually be admitted depends upon the courses desired, since some equipment is already being employed at top capacity.

Between 35 and 40 instructors are now on the staff, most operating full classes. As enrollment grows, said Paulson, added instructors are detailed for present courses. The other means of expansion is the addition of new courses. Priority for these is based on the number of applications, the same way in which the curriculum has been built since the school was inaugurated.

Although present courses are complete in themselves, some new types of training are needed, Paulson realizes. Expansion of some is strictly limited by facilities—for instance, the sewage disposal course.

Eight men are being trained now, and it is hoped to double the job disposal plant can not be added class. But the school's one operating to practically be preparing for such installations and there are only a few trained operators. All the present trainees have positions waiting when they graduate.

Election Issues Suits Scheduled For Busy Court

Action on one important election ballot suit is slated for Thursday in Marion county circuit court while several other suits are hanging fire on the crowded court docket.

Marion County Clerk Harlan Judd and City Recorder Alfred Muntz are scheduled to appear Thursday morning in litigation seeking to bar a Salem Electric franchise proposal from the city ballot.

Muntz and Judd are to show cause why they should not be restrained from placing the measure on the ballot or from informing the voters of the measure. The complaint was brought by Portland General Electric company and Joseph Randall.

PGE contends the Salem Electric measure proposing a franchise in Salem would discriminate against PGE and thus be working of the issue on the ballot is misleading.

Another election suit is the one brought recently by Roland C. Bartlett of Portland, seeking to bar progressive and independent candidates from the state-wide ballot in November. Most of the defendants in the suit including Judd and Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry have filed answers or demurrers to the complaint. But no court room actions has been scheduled.

Another case yet to be acted upon is the recent suit filed by Marion county in an effort to gain right-of-way through land at the site of the Willamette river bridge at Independence.

The suit is in the form of a condemnation proceedings directed against Paulus Brothers packing company and a number of other companies and individuals. The land in question is about one and one-half acres located on the Marion county side of the span.

Short Hearing Seen on Phone Rate Change

Public Utilities Commissioner George H. Flagg declared here Monday that, in his opinion, the second half of the hearing on the application of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph company for an increase in rates, would not last more than two weeks.

The direct case of the telephone company was completed several weeks ago. The telephone company is seeking a rate increase of approximately $4,300,000 annually. Company officials said this increase was necessary to cope with rising operating costs and telephone plant expansion.

Intervening in the proceeding on the side of the utilities commission are the cities of Portland and Eugene. The hearing will be resumed October 19 in Salem.

Oregon Guard Plans First Ball

The first annual military ball honoring all personnel of the Oregon national guard will be held in Portland Saturday, November 20, Major General Thomas E. Rilea has announced.

Rilea said a top-name band would provide music with Ray Heatherton, New York radio and stage personality, serving as master of ceremonies.

The ball will be held under the direction of the national guard bureau in Washington, D.C., and will be spotlighted on a coast-to-coast radio broadcast.

A purse which was snatched from Mrs. E. A. Thompson, 148 E. Miller st., Sunday morning was found and returned to her about four hours later with none of the contents missing, police reported Monday.
